At L. W. COGLEY'S.

He Never Blamed the Booze.

He took a bottle up to bed,
Drank whiskey hot each night,
Drank cocktails in the morning,
But never could get tight.
He shivered in the evening,
And always had the blues,
Until he took a bowl or two—
But he never blamed the booze.

His joints were full of rheumatism,
His appetite was slack;
He had pains between his shoulders,
Chills ran down his back.
He suffered with insomnia,
At night he couldn't snooze,
He said it was the climate—
But he never blamed the booze.

His constitution was run down,
At least, that's what he said;
His legs were swollen each morning,
And he often had a swelled head.
He tackled beer, wine, whiskey,
And if they didn't cure,
He blamed it to dyspepsia—
But he never blamed the booze.

He said he couldn't sleep at night,
And always had bad dreams;
He claimed he always laid awake
Till early sunrise beams.
He thought it was malaria,
Alas! 'twas but a ruse;
He blamed it onto everything—
But he never blamed the booze.

His liver needed scraping,
And his kidneys had the gout;
He swallowed lots of bitters,
Till at last he cleaned them out.
His legs were swollen with dropsy,
Till he had to cut his shoes;
He blamed it on the doctor—
But he never blamed the booze.

Then he had the tremens,
And he tackled rats and snakes,
First he had the fever,
Then he had the shakes.
At last he had a funeral;
And the mourners had the blues,
And the epitaph carved for him was—
He never blamed the booze.

The fire bell rang last Saturday,
a few minutes after noon. Our men found a chimney aflame on the double tenement owned by Thomas Tall, on Valley Avenue. They sent a chemical stream into the flue, and soon stopped the smoke. Pretty nearly all household goods had been removed.

STAMINA VERSUS BLUFF.

Once I knew a brilliant bluff—you have known the very kind—
And when a pace he left the other side behind;
Problems he could solve instantly made us groan and sweat,
And in every he was labeled, "teacher's precious little pet."
But, in later life, the figure that he was set to see,
For he soon was to be rewarded for his bluff and me.
I needed the talents he had lavished on the "last of his kind,"
And he didn't have the stamina to follow up his bluff.

Brilliant striae are far more common than a brilliant bluish;
Beckets roar—his fainting never to be—
Deer, when flushed, do feats of running that would take a fellow's breath,
Yet the man who knows his quarry simply waits the deer to death—
Pluck and never-ending courage are the things that help us most,
And the winner of the one who didn't waste his breath to boast.
Fled and pray, but plod and pray, be the roadway smooth or rough;
Thus you cultivate the stamina to follow up your bluff.

THIS PRIZE ASSIGNMENT

BY ELIZABETH AYRES

"Well, I'll get it all right," Arnold returned, stoutly. "Watch me." "Good boy, win a sure prize," Tom answered the other. "It means a sure prize."

Tom Arnold possessed the excellent quality of never knowing when he was wrong. He had a bulldog way of hanging to anything—once he had fastened his hold, and his wife was sharpened by his year of experience.

"I'm fully city broke now," he had recently written to the girl, smiling in memory of his vision of things when he lived in the country. His vision regarding the girl was the same as of old; this he was sure would never know change.

He started after his interview, filled with the will to do or die. He hunted the places which held the great Bowers and dogged his footsteps with out ceasing. He went to his hotel and sat in his card. No notice was taken of this, but after waiting for an hour or more he was rewarded by seeing the august personage descending in the elevator with much the same air as that of a god coming to earth in a chariot from the sun.

Tom attended the great man to his carriage. He opened the door and stood uncovered while he entered. He took his courage in his hands and asked if he might have a few words with the Hon. D. Bowers. "It is impossible," he was answered. "If you have anything of importance to communicate, write it."

Tom saw the carriage roll away and watched it going up the street, bearing the man who was to be his benefactor. He was making slow, but steady, progress.

The Hon. D. O. Bowers was standing in a circle of ostensibly obsequious admirers. He was being approached by a man who was evidently anxious to give utterance to something weighty, since he was looking about him and collecting his eyes to see that he had everyone's attention. Tom edged as near to him as possible, and for a moment he saw the great man's head as he kept his gaze fixed upon him.

An expression of recognition came into his face. He swept Tom with an examining glance, and found his appearance to his liking. He raised his hand in greeting, saying, "Sorry I couldn't stop when I saw you, but I was in a hurry. I'll speak to you later."

Tom, outwardly calm, but inwardly rejoicing, bowed profoundly. It was the great man's head that he never forgot a face, and he remembered Tom had accompanied him to his carriage.

mechanically without much thought of what he was doing. His eyes happened to glance along his bright length and the gilt letters stamped on its surface seemed to leap to his understanding.

"Reception Committee," the letters formed, and as these meaning-punctuated Tom's brain, at the same moment he grasped their possibility.

Tom whirled to his friend, waving the ribbon. "Have you got a dress suit?" he demanded.

"I might dig up a jacket, but that's about all. You'll need more than that if you intend to appear in public," his friend answered.

"Get sense for a minute if you can," Tom commanded, impatiently. "Look, read and listen," he went on. "Don't you see? Reception Committee. You'll get next to Powers. Maybe he'll talk. He's got to if I choke it out of him. In heaven's name where can I get a dress suit? Work your brain, man! I'll have one if I have to steal it from under your rug. Well, but that grand! Where can I get a dress suit?"

"Tom's friend caught his enthusiasm. He felt back a step and simulated awe-stricken admiration.

"You're a wonder," he declared. "Come with me, my child, and I'll rent glad garments for this nice party." Tom accepted his suggestion, and together they hastened to secure the necessary apparel. The evening clothes were secured with a rush, but that grand! Where can I get a dress suit?

There was no one to bar his entrance when he went into the brilliantly lighted hall. He passed his hand over his head and over his coat as he entered. He mingled freely with the throng, talking with one and then with another as if he were of the elect, and all the time with an eye to the man who was to be his benefactor.

He was making slow, but steady, progress. The Hon. D. O. Bowers was standing in a circle of ostensibly obsequious admirers. He was being approached by a man who was evidently anxious to give utterance to something weighty, since he was looking about him and collecting his eyes to see that he had everyone's attention.

RAM'S HORN BLASTS.

Warning Notes Calling the Wicked to Repentance.

O' raise the fallen to reach His face.

God's will for all is the good-will of all.

Sympathy does not depend on a syllable.

You can exorcise evil by the exercise of good.

You can keep it that you scatter.

Every good deed helps make a track for others.

A divine price must be paid for heavenly peace.

Wise men never hesitate to look in every place.

Our purposes are often the results of God's plans.

Heaven's doors swing open every time a baby smiles.

You can keep thoughts out, but you cannot keep them in.

Heralds of the greatest events have been amongst the lowly.

They who welcome new truth never have to wait long for it.

It is likely to be the faith more than the word that makes the feast.

Our world has always and room for everything but Heaven and love.

Everything that strengthens home binds closer Heaven's hands.

This world has always put its great treasures in some attic or barn.

The nearer we get to Heaven the heavier this world's goods become.

Why don't the men who hate the church move where there are none?

The rising of the Sun of righteousness was the dawn of the day of love.

Nothing could be more unprofitable than a life absorbed in profit-making.

Preaching the hell in the spirit of hell will only drive men in that direction.

Every time you utter a good impulse you make it harder to start the next one.

No nest is more uncomfortable than the one that is feathered with stolen money.

You cannot cast your care on Him until you are carrying some of another's care.

It's a good deal easier to regulate this world than it is to set your own house straight.

There are always people trying to cure this world's drought by writing essays on irrigation.

The great question is not whether you have failed, but whether you are content with failure.
