Primary Election.

There was a light vote cast Tuesday at both polling places, although weather conditions were all that could be asked. Tickets were liberally and recklessly "stuck up" with stickers—ten lots of them coming from Hoyt & Son's press. Polls opened at one o'clock, and closed at nine; and the figures were ready for Town Clerk O'Donnell five hours later. Following are those nominated on the Republican ticket, and the vote:

BANK BROTHERS Fall Opening==1906

A well selected stock of honest merchandise, which is the result of months of careful buying, is offered to the people at Bank Brothers' wide-awake store. Quality that is above criticism; prices marked at the lowest possible notch, so that a small sum of money will have as large a purchasing power here as a large one will have elsewhere.

"Dependable merchandise and no exaggeration of values." This motto has been carried out by us in the past and will be in the future. Judging by the amazingly low price at which we have marked our Fall goods, we are compelled to believe that they will move from our shelves very quickly, and to make sure that everybody benefits by our unequalled values, we have assured a full supply of every item mentioned below for TEN DAYS, beginning Saturday, Sept. 29th.

Clothing Values

Nobody But Father.

Nobody knows the money it takes
To keep the home together;
Nobody knows the debt it makes.
Nobody knows—but father.

Nobody's told that the boys need shoes—
And girls have with a feather;
Nobody else must make them choose.
Nobody—but father.

Nobody bears that the coal and wood
And flour out together;
Nobody else must make them good.
Nobody—but father.

Nobody's hand in the pocket goes
So often, wondering whether There's any end to the wants of those Dependent—only father.

Nobody thinks where the money will come
To pay the bills that gather;
Nobody feels so blue and glum;
Nobody—but father.

Nobody tries so hard to lay
His shoulders for bad weather,
And runs behind, to what he may,
Nobody—but father.

Nobody comes from the world's cruel
Storm.
To meet dear ones who gather
Around with loving welcome warm.
Nobody—but father.

Nobody knows of the home life pure,
Watched over by a mother,
Where rest and bliss are all secure,
Nobody—but father.

HAD MET BEFORE

It's good to see you again, Phyllis, Excited Lady Elmsworth, as she held her sister at arm's length and examined her critically, "but how you have changed!"

"My dear Clara," laughed Miss Graham, "after five years' absence you surely did not expect to find me still all rags and legs, and indelicately big feet!"

"Of course, it's ridiculous; but somehow, I did not realize that you would be quite grown up."

"Oh, my dear, I grew up almost directly you left. Mother soon became alive to the fact of my possibilities,
and I managed to get in the thin end of the wedge first by dining down when there were thirteen, and that sort of thing. In fact, looking back, I'm inclined to think that the 'thin end' was —neither fish, flesh, nor good red fer-

ring, you know—is quite the jolliest time girls ever have, if they could only appreciate it. The only other side to be compared to it for freedom and general irresponsibility is—oh, dear, dear—I'm so sorry I say your pardon." The girls' face flushed crimson as her eyes rested on her sister's black gown.

"You were going to say, wasn't it,
I suppose?" replied Lady Elmsworth,
speaking slightly.

"There's nothing to forgive, Phyl. I never was a lunatic, was I?"

Phyllis Graham's gray eyes widened,
and before she could speak her sister
went on:

"You seem to have had a very jolly
time, as you put it, all along the line,
I think. You seem to do everything and go everywhere."

"Just!" exclaimed the girl. "You talk like mother. Three women are certainly the end of one's tether. After that time one is expected to 'range one's self' and relieve one's own people of their responsibility concerning one, and especially one's bills."

"But I thought you were delighted about your engagement, Phyl," said Lady Elmsworth. "I thought it was a case of natural selection."

"Oh, it's a case of natural selection
at its best, I assure you, but I don't think you're quite right, Phyl."

"Please don't be sentimental, Clara.
Did not much the same thing happen to you? You were just 20, weren't you, when you got engaged to poor old Miss Worth? I was the going to be taken into your confidence then, but you very pretty well confessed the same thing
now. Peter was not precisely the sort of individual to turn a girl's head.
And talked to you about the whole lot of woman, and, in your case, of the pleasures and position of the ambassador's wife, even at the dulllest court in Europe. We were both brought up in the way we should go, and so six months later you were Lady Elmsworth, tasting of the aristocratic pleasures in Madrid. In less time than that I shall be Mrs. Mark Franklin, with more money than I know what to do with,

and a charming husband into the bargain."

"Come, that's better. I am very glad to see my younger sister married.
You have not."

Phyllis laughed outright.

"No, my dear, I have not; one does not wear one's fiancé's countess's title sentiment near one's heart, nowadays.
But please your soul in patience, I told Mark you might come in presently, and you would give him some tea. I wonder if you'll like him? He is a Phyllis said with a little and glanced round her sister's room.

"He'll like your room, at any rate,
it's wonderfully pretty and restful, this room of yours, Clara; and it suits you exactly. Yes, I think Mark will like you, too; but appreciate your sense of the duties of things. Mark is exceedingly artistic."

"Yes?"

"It's rather a weariness of the spirit occasionally," continued Phyllis, with a sigh. "You know—or, rather, you don't, because, although we are sisters, we have not met for five years, and so we really don't know each other much—well, I have not much soul for picture galleries and autumn tints, and that sort of thing. Art is all very well when it's got out of the West House, and stage, and come west really; but it is a little trying when one is expected to enthusiasm over impossible Madonnas with wooden-looking babies in their arms,
and that sort of thing."

Miss Graham looked at her sister wistfully, but Lady Elmsworth only laughed.

"Poor Phyl! Is he trying to educate you? It sounds rather awful."

"No, that's the worst of it! He imagines the education, artistic feeling, and all the rest of it, is there. That's the fault of what mother calls the 'Graham manner.' We've got a knack of appearing intelligently sympathetic;
and because we are pretty people take us for granted. Haven't you found that?"

Lady Elmsworth nodded, and a slight color rose in her cheeks.

"We can't help it," went on Phyllis;
"but they have a nasty knack of turning round on us when they find us out,
and being generally bored."

"And you think Mark—"

"Oh, he's very much in love; and I—
well, I like him well enough to try and live up to him, for a time, at any rate.
But it's a good stretch on one's nerves
to be always under the stroke of administration about things one really does not care a button for. I'm afraid it's the beauties of nature that will bow me over. A sunset at my majesty's, where it's well done, is a pretty enough one in a way. But you know better. I'd rather look at a sunset in Bond street any day than on the finest scene anywhere. I'm afraid it will be a shock to Mark when he grasps the fact."

"What is he exactly?"

"He's rather ugly, and ridiculously
rich; a colonial, you know, proprietor of mines, and all the rest of it. His manners are not quite like everyone else's. Oh, you need not raise your eyebrows. It's not in that way I mean at all. Only I don't think he'd have care for the best bit of Pouter in a butcher's or a baker's daughter. If he'd cared for me, he'd have married me long ago. I'm afraid I'm rather plain. You do care for him, then?"

"You do care for him, then?" Lady Elmsworth looked a little toward her sister and stopped in her face.

"Pardon me, Clara, I—I—"

Lady Elmsworth shrugged her shoulders slightly.

"There's nothing to forgive, Phyl. I
never was a lunatic, was I?"

Phyllis Graham's gray eyes widened,
and before she could speak her sister
went on:

BOYS AND GIRLS

How Do You Know?
HOW DO YOU KNOW—
There's a boy in the house?
By the cap that is hanging downstairs
in the hall;
By the gun and the pistol, the bat and
the ball;
By the Indian war dance, the toy cannon's
roar.
That are heard, now and then, through
the nursery door;
By the engine and drums and the tool
chest and nails;
The steam cars and tracks and the boats
with trim sails;
By the volumes of Cooper which from cove to cove
Have been read and reread by an Indian lover.

"But you must take care, if you value
your head,
When you open the door there's a scramble
and shout;
I'm attacked by a brigand, and I'll never doubt
Who clutches me fast, as a cat does a mouse—
These are good signs there's a boy
in the house!"

HOW DO YOU KNOW?
By the beautiful doll with the movable
eyes—
A French doll that sleeps, and that talks,
By the toyhouse and trunk, and the stove
and the chairs;
By the needle and thread, in the nursery
cupboard;
By the doll hats and furbeaus made
every day
For Annie and Sallie and Beanie and May;
By the soft little laugh and the sweet
little song;
Which never to grow folks or boys could belong.

THE PULPIT

A BRILLIANT SUNDAY SERMON BY
THE REV. D. H. OVERTON

Subject: God's Obligation to Man.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—The Rev. Daniel H. Overton, pastor of Greene Avenue Reformed Church, preached Sunday night in the Bushwick Avenue
Reformed Church at the union service with his own congregation.
The subject was, "God's Obligation to Man." The text was from II. Immortal: "Who saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Jesus Christ before the world began, that He should presents us unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Mr. Overton said:

"There is the law of God and there is the gospel of God. Often have I spoken of the law of God, now I would speak of the gospel of law.
The law of God is the obligation
that which 'expresses man's obligation to God, and the gospel of God
as that which expresses God's obligation to man. The Old Testament was the law, the New Testament was the gospel. The law was the fact that they are not only the law of God, but the gospel of God. This fact that makes the Hebrew religion and the Christian religion different from all the other religions of the world. Many other religions give directly or indirectly the law of God, but none of them gives the law of God as we understand it. The law of God is the obligation of God to man. The law of God is the obligation of God to man. The law of God is the obligation of God to man.
The law of God is the obligation of God to man. The law of God is the Very interesting services were held Sunday, in the M. E. Church, both morning and evening. At the received into full membership. The services all through the past week, held each evening, have been of a unique character, congregations good, and the meetings profitable.

Directors who Direct.

In these days of defalcations and bank wrecking, it is refreshing to know that The Peoples Bank of Hammononton
has a Board of Directors who direct.
There are ten members of this Board and its records show that they have held two meetings each week, and that the average attendance has been ninety per cent the past three months, and this has been the vacation season, when everybody is expected to be absent more or less.

And about auditing accounts previous to the reports which we publish twice a year, and occasionally between times.
Three Directors look over every item of figures, verify every total and balance, examine every bond and mortgage, and note held as security; then count all the cash on hand. This means work, but it enables the auditors to sign their report with clear consciences, with no fear of consequences.

We congratulate stockholders and depositors upon such excellent manage-
prosperity.

LECTURE COURSE.

Circulars will be distributed next week, announcing the series of entertainment lectures, "Lectures in Science."

variety, and the best in each class.

Combination.

Nov. 17th. The Carolina Jubilee Singers.

Dec. 7th. Lou J. Beauchamp.

Jan. 4, 1907. The Lincolns.

Feb. 11. The Ariel Quartette.

Season tickets will be sold at the Bank
for $4.50; Junior (under 18 years), $1.
On Saturday evening, Oct. 13th, present your ticket and twenty-five cents at Hammononton, and exchange for season ticket for the season.

It must be that those who favor saloons in Hammononton have their eyes and ears closed, for there is more drunkenness here now than ever before in the town's history. According to evidence given, a party of men came up from Hotel Royal, a little before twelve o'clock last Saturday night, and stopped at the Hammononton House. Proprietor Polz, seeing they were already too full, refused them a drop. One thing led to another, and they became so noisy that Marshal Myers stepped in and warned them to be quiet. Being cursed by one of the party, Myers placed him under arrest. At this, others turned in to rescue the fellow, and had not Otis Small been deputized and shown his prowess, the officers' gun would have come into play. During the excitement Hoscoe Bickford, who had been arrested on Monday, and refusing to give bonds for his appearance at Court, is now in jail at May's Landing. Constable Hoyle, escorting him thither on Thursday. During the hearing, Monday night, there was entirely too much insolent interference, and had not Justice Garton been good natured, there would have been more than one cell occupied in the lock-up.
There are several men who indulge in Saturday night sprees, and disturb the quiet of early Sunday morning. The marshal proposes to break this up, even if a night in the town's little cooler is necessary.

FOR SALE. Fine ten-roomed brick house
on Franklin Street, between Second and Third streets, four squares from Post Office. Easy

if desired.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

Through unwarrantable fear of catching cold from every breath of air, many people house themselves, both day and night, in rooms and apartments that are little better than air-tight chambers. They force themselves to breathe an atmosphere that is deficient in oxygen and contaminated with carbonic acid and other poisonous gases. And, as a rule, they have their rooms excessively warm. A good fire in an open fireplace may cause part of the contaminant air away with the smoke, but steam radiators and other heating devices which require neither air ducts nor fires in no way diminish the impurities.

The effects of breathing vitiated air are especially pernicious to the health of children. They are generally manifested first in the nervous system by the production of drowsiness and mental dulness. Poisonous matters that are normally exhaled by the lungs and skin are retained in increasing quantity in the blood. They render it impure and a form of anemia is soon produced. This becomes apparent in pallor of countenance, listlessness, nervous depression and loss of appetite. The power of resisting disease is diminished and a condition of chronic invalidism is ultimately developed.

The dread of drafts soon becomes justifiable, for, in the debilitated state of the system, even the currents of cold air that descend from the windows and walls increase the susceptibility to infection to such an extent that the form of disease acquired depends only upon the kind of infectious agents that gain access to the body. No more favorable opportunity can be afforded for the growth of the germs of tuberculosis, influenza, pneumonia, or cerebro-spinal meningitis than in the debilitated state of the body. There may be a physical decline that will terminate in fatal disease of some of the vital organs.

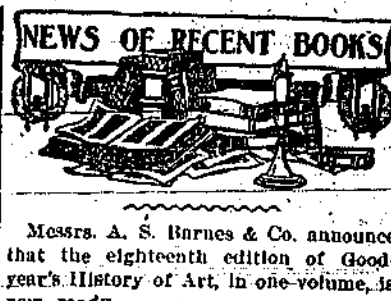

The exclusion of fresh air is a radical mistake that should be corrected before permanent damage has been done. The practice of ventilation can be learned best during the summer season, when drafts are least noticeable. After one has become accustomed to the breathing of pure air, the opposite condition of a unventilated room is intolerable. While this habit is being acquired, however, the body should be strengthened against coldness in drafts by systematic bathing in cold water. The cold of winter then produces no unfavorable stimulation of the nervous system, and a moderate draft need not be feared.—Youth's Companion.

Judicious Followed Directions.
William Allen White, the Kansas editor, told in Harper's Weekly a tale of the trials of a young reporter. His editor had given him instruction in the first principles of the newspaper business. "Tell in the first five lines what your story is about. Give the substance at once. Then follow with a recital of the facts, and conclude with an interesting paragraph." That is the only orderly way a writer should proceed.

The new man gave close attention to this lesson, the result of which was that he handed in that night a news item which read as follows:
"Charles Jenkins, a carpenter, slipped and fell in Vine street yesterday, and sprained his ankle badly."
"Mr. Jenkins was walking along Vine street, when suddenly his feet slipped from under him and he fell, spraining one of his ankles."

"When seen by a reporter he said, 'I was walking along Vine street, when in some way my feet slipped from under me, and I fell heavily to the sidewalk, spraining one of my ankles.'"
"Mr. Frank Paine said, 'I was walking behind Mr. Jenkins on Vine street, when I saw him slip and fall to the sidewalk. When I noticed him to arise he told me that he had sprained one of his ankles.'"

"Mr. Thomas Rich, who attended Mr. Jenkins, said, 'Mr. Jenkins had a badly sprained ankle, due to a fall in Vine street. He will be laid up for some time.'"
"Green, who was it that said, 'Let me make the news of a nation, and I care not who makes his bones?'"

NEWS OF RECENT BOOKS

Messrs. A. S. Barnes & Co. announce that the eighteenth edition of Gooden's History of Art, in one volume, is now ready.

Andrew Lang neatly hits off what will undoubtedly be the determining factor in deciding the matter. "No doubt," he writes, "if more dinner clubs are wanted, a Titmarsh club would be desirable."

Augusta de Wit is the leading writer of Holland. She has seen much of the world and is as much at home in Java's jungles as in the South Highlands, in the lagoon of Venice as in her native Dutch plains.

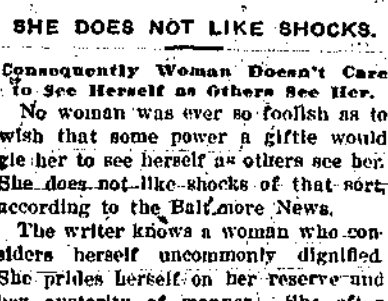

"The Far Horizon" is the title of the new book by Lucas Malet (Mrs. St. Leger Harrison), the daughter of Charles Kingsley, author of "Sir Richard Calmado" and "The Water of Sin."

Thompson & Thomas publish a new novel entitled "A Strange Flaw," by Henry S. Wilcox, a well-known Chicago lawyer. A flaw in a land grant is used to exploit the ways in which the public is plundered by capitalists and promoters, through the agency of the government. There is action throughout the book, and a hero and heroine.

Harold Beale, author of "Master Works," writes of an interview with John Morley: "I asked him what his comfort was, he supported the opinion of all this unrelenting world, but he justified himself and righteousness in a purely material world. His comfort is that the world grows better, that man is happier in doing good than in doing evil, and that life—even as you know it now—is good."

"When street kitchens were in vogue after the San Francisco disaster, most of the people named their miniature cafes. Many of the plates were taken from popular novels. One noticed 'The House of the Rising Sun,' very appropriately borrowed from Octave Thoreau's story by some 'Johnny-on-the-Spot.' Other kitchens gave evidence that Geraldine Bonner's California romances and were named after the characters in them. One named 'Hard Pan.' 'The Morning's Tangle' and 'The Pioneer.'"

Would Thackeray approve of a Thackeray Club? If it were possible to get his views on the subject? That might be suggested by the striking contrast between two responses which have been received to the proposition that such a club should be formed in England. Frederick Greenwood, who knew Thackeray very well, while expressing cordial sympathy with the project, prompts the suggestion, does not think that such a club would have pleased the author of "Vanity Fair." Justin McCarthy, who was to have been Thackeray's guest at dinner on the very day he died, on the other hand, regards the suggestion as "absurd and silly."

SHE DOES NOT LIKE SHOCKS.

Consequently Woman Doesn't Care to be Shocked by Others. See Her. No woman was ever so foolish as to wish that some power a little would give her to see herself as others see her. She does not like shocks of that sort, according to the Baltimore Sun.

The writer knows a woman who considers herself uncommonly dignified. She prides herself on her reserve and her austerity of manner. She often feels that she is too severe, too unapproachable. What was her astonishment, therefore, recently to overhear herself spoken of as that "holly-holly person."

"Holly-holly!" "Some of her models!" "Heaven!" said the woman bitterly, and went at once to the dictionary. "According to the dictionary, 'holly-holly' means 'elated, giddy, flighty, pert, vainglorious, etc.'"

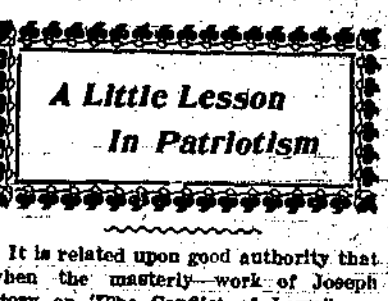

There are many number of women who seem themselves very charitable and are attracted by others just the opposite. They are often who are extremely logical and reasonable and discover later that their husbands consider them both illogical and unreasonable.

Of course, that proves nothing against them; it merely reflects upon the husband. But still it is an unpleasant experience. As a matter of fact, the ordinary woman imagines herself one thing—generally it is a pretty nice thing—and is really quite another.

Man Dressmaker of Paris. His Method of Work—How He Gets an Inspiration. Paris has a man dressmaker, and he is an ordinary dresser, according to the Woman's Home Companion. He is a young man with a long nose and big, winsome eyes. Wearing a gray frock coat and patent leather shoes, he is a very nice-looking fellow.

Midnight Photography is a business that has lately arisen in the W. I. End of London. The photographer takes his models to the most fashionable studios may be seen brilliantly lighted from 12 to 2 a. m., with lights of carriage waiting outside.

For the convenience of ladies attending the evening entertainments at Buckingham Palace, photographers are ready to take photographs in the "small house." All American debutantes wish to be photographed as gowned for one of the great events of their social lives, and cannot spare the hours necessary for arranging themselves atrophied in their presentation rooms.

A Little Lesson in Patriotism

It is related upon good authority that when the masterly work of Joseph Story on "The Conflict of Laws" appeared, the Lord Chancellor of England sent his judicial wig to the American jurist, with an inscription in it which read: "From a Lord Chancellor to one who deserves to be."

The anecdote well illustrates the regard in which Story was held in England, a regard which was shared by continental Europe as well. With John Marshall, he shared the honor of being one of the greatest exponents of human justice.

Story stands in the front rank of those who have been distinguished for their profound and sagacious interpretation of the law. Always a student, he added to his scholarly attainments a profound desire to do the truth be discovered for the benefit of his country. He permitted no prejudice to come between his judgment and his decision.

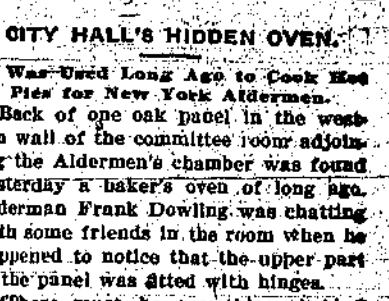

He was only 32 years of age when he was appointed one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. In 1811, an office he continued to hold until his death, in 1845. It is difficult to understand to-day the situation which Story had to deal. The law was in a state of chaos, and it is due to his efforts that a major part of it has been placed in the form in which it is to-day. He was one of the men who acted for the interests of his country, and his memory is honored as one of her great sons.

LEGAL INFORMATION.
The right of local self-government in Rhode Island, which has been strongly urged in view of the pending origin of that State, is denied in Horton vs. Newport (R. I.), 11 R. A. (N. S.) 512, as against a statute regulating the police force of the State.

The power of a court of equity to prevent majority stockholders from exercising their power of control to reduce the capital stock in order to force defaulting stockholders from meeting their obligations is asserted in Thies vs. Durr (W. I.), 11 R. A. (N. S.) 571.

The distinction between private and public functions of a municipality is considered in Dickinson (Mass.), 11 R. A. (N. S.) 604, which denies municipal liability for negligence of the city superintendent of the department in respect to an unsafe lamp-post.

A company manufacturing and bottling a beverage is held, in Watson vs. Augusta Brewing Company (Ga.), 11 R. A. (N. S.) 1178, to be liable to one injured by swallowing pieces of glass while drinking from one of its bottles, which he procured from a merchant, who had purchased the same from the manufacturer.

CITY HALL'S HIDDEN OVEN.

It was found long ago to Cook Men With meat, square text and generous margin. Back of open door in the west wall of the committee room adjacently the Aldermen's chamber was found yesterday a baker's oven of long ago.

Albino Frank Downing was chatting with some friends in the room when he happened to notice that the upper part of the panel was fitted with hinges. "There must be something behind here," he said, and he opened the door.

When he opened the door he found a hidden oven, one similar to that found when the city hall was renovated two years ago, leading from the old Council chamber down a winding way to a small outlet on the north side of the hall. "Tradition has it that the stove was used by Aldermen who after voting against the interests of their constituents escaped by this staircase."

Curious to learn what was hidden behind the panel Mr. Downing and his friends began to pry it open. The stove of paint had been put upon it. Tools were necessary to force it, and when it was done they found there was an old-fashioned oven built into the three-foot brick wall, with a small chimney running to the roof. The oven is about two feet deep by two feet wide and it was half filled with ashes. It has a heavy antique iron door fitted with half-bushings.

None of the discoverers were mystified as to how the oven was heated. There was no sign of a place for building a fire. Mr. Keene, the custodian of the city hall, for over a quarter of a century, was sent for and he delivered this lecture, which explained everything: "The city hall dates back to 1808. This room in which you are now standing was in the early days of the history of this building popularly known as the Aldermen's tea room, although its official designation was the members' room. In those times the Aldermen got no salary, but they allowed them to spend their money for refreshments. They were served with tea and cakes and pies, and in order that the cakes and pies might be served hot a cook was employed and the cooking was done in this oven, which must have been closed up for about seventy years, because the painting on these walls is that old."

ILL-TIMED THINKING.
The superstitions of the Chinese at first themselves to the most trivial events of life. Not only is there "luck" in every incident of one's life, but the luck is good or bad according to circumstances are favorable or otherwise. The combinations of chance and interpretation sometimes appear very ludicrous to Westerners, as is shown in an example given by Adele M. Fieide in her book on China.

Stealing is supposed to be a sign that somebody is thinking of one. One day a man was walking along the road, and conscious that a stranger was walking behind him, he turned his head and looked back. He saw a man in a long coat and a top hat, and he was a bachelor, he decided to appear to be the head of a household, and so he exclaimed, "Ah, my wife is thinking of me!"

The second man, on reaching home, asked his wife why she had not thought of him at all that day. The wife inquired why he asked such an unusual question, and after much persuasion, while he revealed the reason. When he told her that he had not answered, she said, "I am thinking of you, and that is proof of a wife's love."

A Man and His Word

DESK was descending over the Wabash district—descending prematurely, because the wind from the east drove vast clouds of smoke and fumes from the chimneys of factories and towards the setting sun, whose fading light it veiled, though now and then the slanting rays pierced through the great black cloak of commerce and momentarily danced upon the dust-laden air and the dirty, upland.

A man stood on the sloping side of one of the many slag hills which lay in all directions, and by their dull gray mass added immeasurably to the general hideousness of the district. He was counting the furnaces with their belching columns of flame and the great stacks from which issued dense black and yellow smoke, which rolled and coiled across the sky towards the setting sun and floated on the lower stratum of the air like dirty oil.

He was a big, loose-limbed man, ill-fitting clothes. His long gray beard and mustache and his determined looking mouth, and his bushy eyebrows cast shadows over his deep-set eyes, which looked from hill to hill. But now the wind from the east and blew the most fresh, and the little valley united up at John Allen as if it took him for a stranger and was amused in anticipation of his surprise. And it stood so strangely there—to find it green and blooming, while the hillsides and outstretching uplands were barren, brown, scorched as a resting place even by the need of outworn timber.

Half way down the winding roadways as the valley, pretty hidden by a belt of stunted trees, stood a large house with extensive stabling and an ornate conservatory. John's eyes took in the details of the place with an angry gleam. It had looked much like the one thirty-odd years before, when he had been a boy, and it was the first time. And it brought back to his mind vividly the incidents of that visit; the cold, cutting courtesy of the man who had loved by the woman he had loved; the man's well-learned attitude of cynical attention.

"It is true, Mr. Allen, I have pointed out to her that you are but a working man; an excellent workman, I have no doubt, but still a workman, earning a humble wage, which is, I feel sure, though I have had great knowledge on the subject, quite insufficient to provide her with more than the mere essentials of life," Raymond had said, with the calmness and deliberation of a man who is not afraid, though Allen had looked at him with a stare. "I do not feel that I have told the man before her in a way unfair to you, Mr. Allen; I have needed to, for the facts as they stand plainly bear me out. You are a man of a gift of superior rank, taste and so on, and I am sure that you will not be surprised by my hope that she has not married a man who is not quite fair."

It was the same Raymond, grown old, who half rose as Allen was about to enter on a somewhat similar method. The change in Allen was more marked than the change in Raymond. He was now too old to fumble with his cap and to land down conclusions of his power to be shocked by the other's steady stare, and it was another's heart that had come to gladden.

"You come to speak about my boy old Raymond," Mr. Raymond, he said, straightly. "Still, Allen, your son? Yes, he had a fine, good-looking young man. I passed him yesterday, and he struck me then that he is just the right man for you. He is a fine, good-looking young man, and he is just the right man for you. He is a fine, good-looking young man, and he is just the right man for you."

Again, for hands that forth it bore. And open'd it, to disclose its lore. Again, for crypt were long have stood. The record of a house and blood."

Close shut within this hallowed home We read the story of our race. Here, hush, is told beneath each hand. When father, mother, children, wed—Who came to bless sweet joys—and they With trembling and reluctant pen Slow added, 'Yes, as God decreed, The roll of those who filled his need.

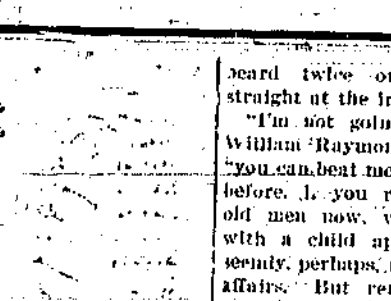

Dear hands that once its pages turned Have gained the rest they well had earned; Dear forms that once knelt side by side Have strayed afar, are scattered wide; The covers show the print of tears. The records yield to time and tears; But in its majesty of truth The text preserves eternal youth!
