New Jersey State Federation of Labor.

Editor South Jersey Republican,

VINELAND, N. J., October 31st, 1906.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of information to the effect that a Mr. W. I. Garrison, of Pleasantville, is a candidate on a so-called Labor Party ticket for Assembly from Atlantic County. How Mr. Garrison can come out and run on a Labor ticket is beyond my comprehension, as this gentleman has never been a member of any labor organization or has he ever been eligible to be a member of such. This being true, Mr. Garrison cannot be a bonafide candidate on any labor ticket, and from an investigation made by myself I do most emphatically deny that this gentleman has any right to pose as a union man, or is he entitled to any endorsement from any union connected with the American Federation of Labor.

The alleged endorsement of his candidacy, I learn, has been made by some persons, a few of whom claim membership in a laborers' organization in Atlantic City. That it is the right of an individual to endorse and vote who he may see fit none will deny, but when it comes to pledging the support of the American Federation of Labor to the candidacy of one or more political tricksters, the organization so pledged has something to say about this proposition.

So that union men in Atlantic County may not be misled by the usual sophistries doled out at election times, I respectfully request the publication of the foregoing in your valuable paper.

Respectfully yours,
EDW. W. VANAMAN,
1st Vice-Pres. N. J. State Federation of Labor.

Hallowe'en Pranks.

Until nine o'clock, Wednesday eve'g, it looked as though the downpour of rain would prevent the usual sport (?); but from that time to four o'clock the boys got busy. Bells rang, locomotive and factory whistles for half an hour or less, barber poles climbed fences (and one boarded a north-bound freight), beer signs graced church and parsonage steps; wagons, gates, bicycle racks, and portable property got so badly mixed up that it will take days to sort them out. Outbuildings were overturned, inconveniencing the owners, and fences damaged. Several street signs were broken down, and in one case five small boys (who ought to have been tucked into bed by their mothers hours before), were caught in the act, and promised to make good.

The most malicious of all their doings was at Central School. Ink was poured on the handsome rug, walls and desks scratched up, and books misplaced about the rooms. Arrests may follow.

Those of less mischievous nature took to dressing up in comical togs and visiting their friends; and others spent the evening at parties and dances.

Altogether, it was an enjoyable night for all, excepting those who wished to sleep, and those whose property was being damaged. Complaints have been numerous, loud, and deep, and relief demanded.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN: Permit me to protest strongly against the vandalism committed last night (Oct. 31st), in St. Joseph's Church. Forcing one's way through windows, breaking open doors, and doors, not of heroes, but of burglars. Churches are public buildings, and must be protected by town authorities, just as well as banks, post offices, or public schools. The law of the State forbids public annoyance in the hallowe'en, as in any other day or night. I hope this protest will be taken under consideration, if not by the supposed heroes of last night, at least by the authorities of the town, for whom I have the greatest respect, by preventing similar occurrences in my Church in the next and following years. My congregation, especially the Italians, are greatly exasperated.

I am yours truly,
Rev. JOSEPH TRANSMERIO.

OMITS HIS MAIDEN SPEECH.

New member of the Congress is taught a lesson by constituents. Few people have any idea how close to the watch kept by earnest constituents upon the parliamentary performance of their representatives. About three months after the house met this year a new member, a friend of mine, went down to his constituency. He had not made his maiden speech at the time, but he attached little importance to this, thinking that probably he was more conscious of the fact than was any one else. He was soon introduced, for the porter who took his bag at the station remarked directly the honorable gentleman stepped from the train: "Haven't had the pleasure of reading your maiden speech yet, sir—we're looking out for it."

My friend had to make a polite and pleasant answer, for the porter was a most energetic elector. Then nearly every one he met began with the screaming formula: "Haven't had the pleasure—until he was nearly mad. The climax was reached when he asked a policeman what to do when he took the constable having in most slight manner replied, "First to the right and second to the left," changed his tone and looking severely at the poor man began: "Haven't had the pleasure—until he was nearly mad. And at this my friend fled."

CHINESE SKILL WITH AXES.

Carpenters of Cathay Will Compare with Occidentals.

Naturally pre-eminence among the skilled craftsmen of China, the superior skill maintains the leadership. Though almost invariably wedded to the use of the tools of his ancestors and to their methods, judged by results he is more efficient than the average of the foreign craftsmen and machinists in their, though a constant diminution of the difference is in progress.

In judging the performance of the native workman, it is important to add to the popular bias that addition to their own methods and tools invariably speaks of a conservative. Though this is in many cases true, it will often be found on careful observation that what has passed is not stubborn blindness to the virtue of innovation is in reality a keener perception of comparative merits than the judge himself was aware of.

This is particularly true of Chinese carpenters. While most of their commonest tools differ in some radical way from our own, it is never safe to assume the superiority of the western product. Their small ax, for example, is a beautifully balanced tool and they are remarkably adept in the use of it being able to work as true a surface therewith as can be obtained with an axe in the hands of the white man.

On heavy work it is customary for two to hew together on opposite sides, striking alternately blows. Both hands are used and the worker is over the shoulder, alternate right and left. There is a freedom of swing with an accuracy of delivery that is a treat to watch and the rapidity of blows is in itself bewildering. Engineering Magazine.

Unfortunately Put.

"I had the good luck to be invited to dine with the king at Marlborough house when I was in London in June," said a Western millmiller.

"As I didn't know how to dress the part of a royal guest, I wrote to Lord Knollys, the king's secretary, and asked help."

Lord Knollys said in his reply: "As an ladies are to be present, trousers may be worn."

"When I first read that sentence, I said to myself: 'What kind of Norfolk revels go on at Marlborough house, any way?'"

"Afterwards, though, I learned that Lord Knollys only meant that at mixed dinners knee breeches were worn at Marlborough house, at stag ones the ordinary evening suit sufficing."

A Little Lesson In Patriotism

GEN. E. W. RICE.

On the 7th of November, 1861, the Seventh went into the battle of Belmont, the first battle commanded by General Grant. Up on the first charge of the regiment the colonel was wounded and the lieutenant colonel killed. The command of the regiment fell upon Major Elliott W. Rice.

Rice, himself badly wounded, and his horse had already been shot away from under him, and he was so weak from exhaustion that he was barely able to mount another, but he bravely persisted in the performance of his duty. Charging through the line of the enemy he led his men.

The battle of Belmont was, however, not destined to be a Union victory. Rice, knowing that the tide had turned against his cause, did his best to aid the retreating men. With the Seventh he covered the retreat of the entire command till the last moment, when he was shot through the chest and fell. He was not sufficiently recovered from his aid of crutches but he went into the assault with them.

Throughout the entire campaign of Grant, Rice was one of the officers under the general who were distinguished for their gallantry. It was a hard-fought campaign every step of the way from the west to the east, and that a man never failed to do his duty is proof enough of his courage.

MARKS OF ILLNESS ON NAILS.

How Accident and Great Mental Anguish are Also Indicated.

"One who makes a close study of finger nails will find many curious things about them to excite his wonder and interest," says an expert on such matters, "but none more so than the stories of physical condition told in their growth."

"You know that the nail of a person in good health grows at the rate of about one-sixteenth of an inch each week—eighty more than many authorities believe—but during illness or after an accident the nail grows at a slower rate. In fact, it is not infrequently found that the growth has been arrested for a time, and the nail is found to be shorter than it should be."

"If the illness is one that comes suddenly, like typhoid fever, for example, instead of a ridge a rent will appear on the nail. Should one have an arm broken the thick ridge can be seen only on the fingers of the one hand, but in all cases of general sickness the ridge or rent appears on the fingers of both hands. When a nail has passed through a period of extreme excitement or mental depression, the fact will be imprinted on the nail either with an abrupt edge or a gentle slope, according to the nature of the mental influence."

"In no instance can the marks of illness, accident or mental condition be clearly seen on the nail until after the growth has entered the nail beyond the white or half-moon portion of it, but a week or two subsequent to any of these things the ridge or slope may be found on the nail, usually readily visible to the eyes, but if the mark may be found by running the tip of the finger down the side of the nail."

Lord Knollys said in his reply: "As an ladies are to be present, trousers may be worn."

"When I first read that sentence, I said to myself: 'What kind of Norfolk revels go on at Marlborough house, any way?'"

"Afterwards, though, I learned that Lord Knollys only meant that at mixed dinners knee breeches were worn at Marlborough house, at stag ones the ordinary evening suit sufficing."

"Nothing to it," replied the hunter. "No man who feels that way ever reaches 'well enough'." Philadelphia Press.

DRAWBACK OF GREAT WEALTH.

Former Employee of Russell Sage Pays Tribute to Him.

Twenty years ago few persons could get into the presence of Russell Sage without passing inspection by John R. McCann, who for a long time was Mr. Sage's confidential clerk. Mr. McCann served efficiently in that position, but he had a soul for poetry, and after ten years he left the office for literature, says the Wall Street Journal.

Now that Mr. Sage has died, Mr. McCann contributes to the Journal a remarkable tribute to his character. He speaks of him as a genius. He says he was a deeply religious man, who had often during a full life in the storm of business "muttered a little prayer," and who in the panic of May, 1894, "when the universe seemed quaking about his ears, looked and acted like one in deep communion with the infinite."

He declares that Mr. Sage was a "true man and a gentleman." While it was impossible for Mr. McCann to be able to know how to offend deliberately. The proof of his moral courage was to be found in the fact that for nearly 24,000 days he insisted on living his own life "by his own way, regardless of criticism, whereas Mr. Sage, who had drawn the been made a reckless spendthrift by the ridicule to which Mr. Sage was subjected because of the carelessness of his personal expenditures.

Mr. McCann says that after he left Mr. Sage in 1880 he only saw him three times. The last time, Mr. Sage composed for him a letter, which he had alone, and he was indignant when his former clerk explained that because of Mr. Sage's great wealth the visits from Mr. Sage were misinterpreted.

Mr. McCann makes no comment upon this, but it illustrates strikingly the tragedy of great wealth. Here were two men of large ability and warm personal liking and mutual respect. More than that, they had been associated for ten years in business, but they were separated by $30,000,000, which one of them possessed and the other did not. The rich man did not consider this a bar to friendship, but the poor man did. To visit the rich man would be to visit the poor man to a misanthropic of his own riches; his self-respect would have been compromised. McCann told Sage that if he were poor, even three Gattling guns could not keep them apart.

What Sage would do for the poor man, were they any compensation for public criticism and ridicule, for the severance of desirable association, for the isolation and distrust of enormous wealth?

Making a Machine.

"There is, perhaps, no other trade, and very few professions, writes the Washington in the Technical World Magazine, "that require the high order of intelligence, the study, the application, the real hard-headed common sense, the surgeon's delicacy of touch, for instance, in fitting of fine work—the machine's trade demands to give the excellent work and the interchangeability of parts found in the modern rifle or sewing machine. The range of his work is from a needle to a battleship. From automatic machinery that would talk French had it one more movement to measuring machines guaranteed not to vary more than the millionth part of an inch from the standard. This decision will perhaps be better appreciated when it is remembered that 150 times this limit of variation is only equal to the diameter of the average human hair. Standard plug and ring gauges, to take a specific example, are so accurately fitted to each other that the expansion due to the warmth of the hand, if the plug be held in it for a few moments, will make it impossible to insert the plug in the ring; while, if the ring be expanded in the same way, the plug will drop right through it."

When the machine has become skilful enough to fulfill the above requirements, he may receive from $250 per day up to whatever he can make himself worth and prove it."

A certain Deacon Sam Knowlton in his day had the reputation of being a great hunter. At the beginning of every hunting season he would go into Cumberland county and on his return he was always laden with many stags in which he figured as hero, but the fact remained that, while his supply of stags was large, his game bag was usually empty.

One of his neighbors, a physician, heard his stories until he was tired. One evening at a social gathering the matter was being discussed.

"Deacon Knowlton is a great hunter?" Of course he is," exclaimed the doctor. "In the greatest hunter in the State of Pennsylvania, but darn me if he was ever known to find anything!" Philadelphia Ledger.

TAMENESS OF WILD ANIMALS.

Some of the Queer Things to Be Seen in California.

That wild animals become extremely tame is well known. The wild quail of southern California will enter gardens and nest there, and in the protected season I have seen a flock standing in a country road, a jaunty male between them, and my horse not twenty feet away, moving only when I moved, and then with reluctance, says a writer in the Scientific American.

Several years ago some residents on one of the channel islands of southern California introduced a number of black-tailed deer, which were protected to such an extent that in time they discovered they were privileged characters and assumed the absolute contempt for human beings held by the sacred bulls of India, that crowd men and women from the west. They persisted in entering gardens, day and night, destroying the plants, and finally to locate them, the dwellers on the island had bells fastened to them. One buck made his home near the town of San Luis Obispo, and he was the pet of the children, and over the hills with the freedom of a dog. When a boat landed off the pier, the buck ran down to greet the newcomers and share their lunch, and became a welcome guest at barbecues and lobster and clam-bakes.

Nearly all animal life is protected at this island. I have counted half a hundred bald eagles in an eleven-mile run, have seen them take a large fish from the water within easy gunshot, and they build their nests on the plains and over the hills with the freedom of a dog. When a boat landed off the pier, the buck ran down to greet the newcomers and share their lunch, and became a welcome guest at barbecues and lobster and clam-bakes.

"You can have the sugar-plums if I say you may," said the indulgent queen. "I will tell mama all about it when she returns."

Prince Eddie waved momentarily, then reiterated his refusal. "We'd like them," he sighed, "but that's what mother said."

The queen was slightly annoyed at this opposition. "But I said you may," she said.

Prince Eddie stood his ground, a hero between two foes—the wishes of his mother and those of his almost adored grandmother. His sister and his brothers followed his lead.

When the queen's answer was put the monarch on the nursery table and there they stayed for months untouched, a handsome monument to the thoroughness of the princess' training and the respectful love and devotion of her children.

THE VALUE OF HIS MONEY.

Baptiste Delormier was an unusual character—a mixture of a naturally free man and a miser. He did not spend his money recklessly, and he liked to get his money's worth whenever he spent any at all. But there was one time, in particular, when it seemed as if he were really getting just about all that he was entitled to.

"I am waiting for an answer," said Arthur Rutland Greville, fourth Duke of Woldshire, was a handsome, good-tempered giant of some four-and-twenty years of age, and one of the most eligible bachelors in the kingdom. That he was very rich was a fact, and he was very rich indeed.

WHILE MOTHER WAS AWAY.

The Princess of Wales has trained her children so carefully in habits of obedience and reverence that they are most trustworthy little persons. Before her royal highness started on her trip round the world with her husband she drew up a list of rules to be observed in the nursery, and added a series of light tasks to be fulfilled by each one of the youngsters before the date set for her return.

The rules were to be enforced by the nurses. The performance of the tasks was left to the honor of the children, and in addition there was a list of things they must not do.

There were occasional lapses of memory as regards the forbidden things, and some carelessness in carrying out the tasks, for royal children, despite the severity of their training, are children still. But in the main they respected their mother's wishes and commands, and took no advantage of her absence. Upon one occasion, however, they were sorely tempted. This was when their loving and beloved grandmother, Queen Alexandra, brought them a big box of donkeys. But when the sweets were offered to them, one child after another reluctantly but firmly declined to take any.

Prince Eddie waved momentarily, then reiterated his refusal. "We'd like them," he sighed, "but that's what mother said."

The queen was slightly annoyed at this opposition. "But I said you may," she said.

THE BUD.

MOLLIE NUGENT lay in bed in her pretty room at Grey Friars street, overlooking the advent of her morning tea and hot water. She had been demoralized beneath the Duchess of Woldshire's hospitable roof for a whole week now, and was thoroughly enjoying her visit. Her hostess was a genial, easy-going soul who in no sense suggested by her personal appearance her great rank. But it was not of the amiable duchess that Mollie was at present thinking. It was rather the lady's son—the holder of the title—who filled—"our little lugene's"

"Well," dropping her voice mysteriously, "I've been eavesdropping. Dreadful, wasn't it? I really couldn't help myself. I had moved them, but I heard all they were talking about, and then they would have felt so awkward—poor things."

"And who are 'they'?" demanded Woldshire, curiously.

"Why, Lady Eryntrude and Captain, of course," returned the lady innocently.

A dull, red flush suffused the young nobleman's tanned cheeks. He hated himself for doing it, but he felt that he must put a joking question. "Well, I suppose the nature of their conversation wasn't so very private?" he remarked in a quizzical casual tone.

Mollie smiled sweetly. "I'm sorry to say it was—very much so," she replied lightly. "They were evidently in the heat of a lover's quarrel. Capt. Eryntrude was accusing Lady Eryntrude of throwing him over for a richer man, and she, poor dear, was trying to prove to him how greatly unjust his accusation was."

"Oh," Woldshire pronounced the unobtainable in a tone which implied much anything or nothing, so Mollie gathered her courage in both hands and continued gently:

"She accused Capt. Eryntrude of loving her, but that her duty was to her family, and that she was bound to make a wealthy marriage. I suppose she was referring to Lord Arnot, isn't it?"

"Yes, indeed," said Capt. Eryntrude, in so judicious, but it? The girl's innocent blue eyes were fixed on the duke, but his own were averted.

"I suppose so," he assented with a strange lowering of his brows. Woldshire held in the faintest doubt in his mind that he himself was not a little amused at the nature of the conversation.

"I think it will be terribly hard on the man she promises to marry if she doesn't really love him," went on Mollie in her sweet, artful voice.

"You won't mention to anyone what you have heard, will you?" he asked. "Don't joke about it with any of your friends, I mean there's a good little soul."

She looked at him with shocked, bewildered eyes. "Oh, do you think me capable of such a thing?" she murmured reproachfully. "I shouldn't have told you only you asked me."

"I know I did," he returned apologetically, "and I'm a brute to imagine that such a tender-hearted little girl as you have heard of would use the word 'ask' of me. How old are you, Mollie?"

"I'm just 18," she answered, apparently oblivious of the fact that he had addressed her by her Christian name.

"You won't listen to me?" he was pleading. "You know how much I love you. Can't you give me one word of hope, dear?"

"It's impossible," came the answer in a gentle-waved voice, which nevertheless carried Mollie to sit up and listen with keen interest, a flush suffusing her fair, rounded cheeks as she did so. "You see, I'm not a girl, I'm a woman. I don't love you, I don't care for you, I don't want you. I'm a very dear friend, if only you would be content with that."

"But I can't be content with that," she interrupted, suddenly. "I want more than your friendship, I want you. Ah, you may deny it now, but there was a time when you did love me—just a little. That was before—"

"He stopped abruptly, and Mollie leaped forward a trifle more in her anxiety to let no word of the conversation escape her.

IF LIFE WERE BUT A YEAR.

It is never but a year? It is only once, therefore, to see Grass newly sprung, and daffodils, The baby lambs, the blossoms on the trees.

And if that time were ours to lose—The cuckoo in the fresh leaf-muffled hills—

It life were but a year! And if no more than once we could be blest—Blessed heavens, and apples dashed with light—

And leaves of wood afloat with red and gold; If only once, only, we could hear The swallows trooping for their southern flight—

It life were but a year! And no succession of the seasons brought, An season after season brings The sweet recurrence of familiar things—

Changes habit makes so dear, The associations of accustomed things! I strive, in soul and sense, To realize the loss—the dolorous death Of sounds which reach the spirit's ear, Of many a prompting of the gracious earth—

Of many a blessed influence, Vision, and touch—if life were but a year.

You great-winged angel four, Bring with the lamb and snowdrop, Gladness and hope; and when the green Takes color, peace and toil's contented mood.

Spl. Earth, sun-creating creature, And keep life sweet with God's divine routine.

NO HUMAN LIFE ON STARS.

Existence of beings like Man Possible in Solar System Only.

Astronomers can see with a great power telescope at least 100,000,000 stars in the entire universe. The question arises: "How many other bodies like the earth exist in space?" Professor T. J. J. of the United States navy claims that the study of the double stars tends to support the contention of Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace that the universe is not inhabited except the earth alone.

In 1892 Dr. See published a work on the orbits of all the double stars, and he determined at that time that there were at least 10,000 double stars in the sky. He found that the orbits of the stars were not circular, but elliptical, and that the stars were not in the same plane, but in different planes.

He found that the stars were not in the same plane, but in different planes. He found that the stars were not in the same plane, but in different planes. He found that the stars were not in the same plane, but in different planes.

"Do you say that as a lawyer or a man?" exclaimed an exasperated woman when a lawyer was cross-examined. "If you say it as a man, it is a lawyer; but if you say it as a man, it is a lawyer."

"I know I did," he returned apologetically, "and I'm a brute to imagine that such a tender-hearted little girl as

E. V. M., a Newark tradesman, age 44 years, two years ago took out a Prudential policy for $1000. He had paid premiums on his policy, amounting to $113.10. He died recently, and two days after presentation of claim, The Prudential handed his widow a check for $1,000.

Much Like a Picnic.

The supper given by the men of the Universalist Church, Thursday night, proved successful, in quantity, quality, and attendance. While it would be difficult to decide who rated A1 in the several lines, it is safe to say that the white bread was of unsurpassed quality and the cakes a close second. The salade received close attention. That production of Mr. Wm. L. Black's, a la Chebeague, was exceptionally fine.

The ham, pronounced by all the finest of the season, was found in the market of that bold Knight of the Cleaver and Champion of Grease, H. L. McIntyre.

Special mention should be made of the apple sauce furnished by Mr. E. S.
Packard. Of exquisite color and flavor, it won the praise it merited.

An entertainment followed supper.
Mrs. Austin charmed the company with a solo. Miss Brewster followed with a reading which was, as one present put it, a reminder of a scene in the old red school house of his boyhood.

Pastor Dickey, in a brief scholarly address, pointed out a few truths which his hearers would treasure as "apples of gold in pictures of silver."

The programme closed by Mr. Osgood singing his favorite solo, as no one else can sing it.

All who took part in this affair feel that their efforts were appreciated; yet be it distinctly understood, they do not feel it necessary to shake out a reef in their hat-bands. ONE.
