POETRY.

How oftenties do we regret
A word ankindly spokes,
And moure alasi, where all ten late
The tits of friendthip broken;—
Oft-times would give if we had all
Of wealth an untold treasure,
Could we some heady word recall
Destroying every pleasure.

Fall beavily returning.
And offentions the perverse heart
With unteld anguida riven,
Weeps for the lies thus rest sport
And longs to be forgiven,
But should the breach be healed again
And sweet forgiveness teated,
The cruel near will still remaio,
And confidence be blarted.

And conserves so blatted.

Then set a seal upon your lips,

Nor trust your tongue in blinders

Or if a word between them tilps,

Let them he words of kinders;

For sharper than a two-edged snord,

Within the bosom resting

Is the memory of a bitter word,

Though spoken but in justing.
