MAY'S LANDING, JANUARY 29, 1910.

Sportsmen throughout the State urge a revi sion of the game law in regard to the open season for shooting wild duck. When the season opens in November, the game has flown South and Jersey gunners have no South of Ventnor Ave. $2,300. opportunity to enjoy the sport. Opening of the season in September is thought advisable.

It is proposed to impose a tax of one dollar each on motor boats in New Jersey, to aid in dredging channals, staking courses and otherwise improving waterways for the use of power boats. Few yachtsmen would object to such a tax. It would mean thousands of 70 ft. East side Metropolitan Ave. 520 ft. South dollars more to the State each year for the purpose of making rivers and thoroughfares more navigable and would thereby enhance the pleasure of the sport to every owner of a motorboat. The suggestion is not a bad one.

Stranded on the Atlantic City beach becaus the channel at the Absecon Inlet was not deep enough to enter, the yacht "Mist" mutely testifies to the urgent need of improving that waterway. An inlet deep enough to admit sea-craft of ordinary draught is a growing necessity, and it is to be hoped that the government will recognise the need at an early date. Absecon Inlet should be a haven of refuge for storm-bound vessels plying along the Atlantic coast, as well as a port of entry at all times.

From now on the appearance of Halley's comet and the "new" wanderer of the sky will attract the attention of mankind. For psychological reasons, which cannot be entered into here, such natural phenomena have a strange fascination, and readily cause misgivings among superstitious people. The fact that and by the reasonable certainty of astronomical calculations, can accurately determine their course, should reassure the most timid that there is no possibility of contact with the earth. The "end of the world," if it comes this year, will not be occasioned by our comet

Students of economic science are unable to North side Atlantic Ave. $1. agree on the cause of the present high cost of living. It seems to be very much like a circle pointing to its neighbor. on the trusts, others on ven the farmer comes in for a share of the general censure. May it not be attributed in part to the fictitious valuation of commodities, both in themselves and in relation to coln of the realm? There is a flaw somewhere in our economic system. If every commerce received its just valuation, of workers proportionate wages and those who bartered in markets took only side of Maine Ave. $1. proper gains, we opine that the cost of living would be decreased.

Commendation from all sides is heard of the new excise bill which was introduced Monday evening in the House of Assembly by Leader Walter E. Edge. It is a well-framed measure, and seems to so admirably balance the different opinions on the subject, that its success is almost certain. There will no doubt be some opposition to its liberality, but in the long run and general adequacy in regard to the proper restriction, of the liquor traffic should appeal to the good judgment of all. Assemblyman Walter E. Edge has the right idea; it has been brought before the Legislature in the right | $1. way and both Houses will be doing the right thing by Atlantic City in passing the bill.

Preliminary steps have been taken by the scribed as above, $175. organisation of a Committee for the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of May's Landing. The early history of New Jersey's towns is somewhat uncertain, but authentic data seems to confirm the opinion | J. Byron Rogers to Anna Estell Bourgeois that the municipality was founded in irreg. Indeed, the pretty little missive was my first intimation that a member of the opposite sex saw. in me something more than in the other boys of her acquaintance. I didn't stop to consider that she might have sent one to a dozen other boys. If I had the heavenly flower of love might have been nipped in the bud. I knew Effie had sent me the valentine, for, fearing I might be mistaken with letting me know that Effie loved me. Many a verse, many a letter, has been penned by a woman who intends to tell of the love she bears a man that have not in them a tithe of the pure sentiment that came to me in those lines, which had been slung off in thousands by a pressman in a dirty apron. I dreamed over my valentine, and I dreamed of Effie. She is now very necessary to me, but she is incapable of inspiring me with any of that delicious feeling which welled up within me like waters fitted to be quaffed by angels. I carried it to school with me and at recess stole nway from the other children to look at it. I had it with me in my room when I went to bed and studied it till I knew every flower, every vine, every cupid. It was the last thing I thought of before going to sleep and the first after awaking in the morning. Where was 1? I remember-I was abusing my future mother-in-law for being so stupid as to refuse me her daughter's hand. This was long after I had received the valentine, for Effie was nineteen and I was twenty. Effie was as stupid, I thought, as her mother about the matter, for although she declared she would never marry any one but me, she demurred at becoming my wife, I being in possession of an income of nothing a year. At any rate, she told me that, her mother having forbidden her from receiving or communicating with me. she would obey. Indeed, she was forced to obey. I couldn't take care of her as my wife, and I had no right to be dangling about her keeping desirable suitors away.

I accused her of heartlessness and other unattractive traits till I drew tears, then called myself a brute, then kissed her goodby and then went away determined to put myself in a position to earn enough to marry on. I worked like a Trojan. I did not only my own work, but every one else's in the office where I was employed. While I was standing before the members of the firm with a puzzledtook on my face I was not thinking of the proposition or the $6,000 a year; I was thinking of how to communicate the good news to Effic. I believed her mother would grow more and more difficult to satisfy in a pecuniary way each year, and I determined not to appeal to her, but to Effie direct. entine. I was offered my new position the 1st of January, and in six weeks sent Effle, who was now twenty-two years old, a valentine. I was aware that the custom had even at that day fallen largely into the hands of children. I didn't intend to declare my love in verses that had now come to seem cheap to me. I used the valentine as a starter for a clandestine correspondence. I wrote a message on it A hundred years ago, when there in lemon julce, then indited in a dis-
