Young Men's Republican League To Journey Here May 7 for Initial Contest of the Season-Pastime Park In Fine Order.

Manager Samuel Kirby, of the County Capitof Base Ball Association, has secured the crack team of the Young Men's Republican League, Atlantic City, for the opening game of the base ball season Saturday afternoon, the County championship pennant and a fast.

game is promised. Pastime Park has been put in fine condition "Moving Day in Jungle Town" Herbert Smith for the season, with the grounds regravelled, "Can't you see I love you?"... Charles Simpson the grandstand repaired and other improvements. It is in better shape than in many years and one of the finest in South Jersey. Charles Coventry, caretaker of the grounds, is sparing no pains to have it in prime condition for the opening game. The grandstand has been rebuilt and new wire netting erected for the safety of patrons of the game. One of the attractions of the opening contest will be a concert by the Capital Cornet Band, which will play before the opening of the game. The first ball will be tossed out on the field by Supt. Charles Kears, of the Water Power Company, one of the directors of the Association. The line-up of the Association will be as follows, subject to change: Wilmer Abbott, centre field; Thomas Stewart, left field; Wallace Coventry; pitcher and right field; William Sharpley, catcher; Albert C. Abbott, pitcher and right field; Charles Stewart, first base; Melita Loveland; Snarley, Miss Valetta Love Gny Doane, second base; John E. Iszard, short stop; Claude Myrose, third base, Substitutes, Henry Kraus and Joseph Wiggles-Good financial support has been given the Association thus far and the management is confident that the public will take interest in the National game and contribute to its support by attending the contests during the May Petit Jury.

ll satisfied with the Deer hunters are not at present State law. The Regislature, in compliance with the sentiment of sportsmen, passed a measure permitting the use of dogs in hunting the animals and providing for a longer open season, but the Governor vetoed the bill. The wishes of the sportsmen should have been heeded

One of the things May's Linding needs more than anything else just at this particular time is paint, and it needs a lot of it. There are many houses throughout the town that need painting, and need it very much, to put it mildly. A liberal use of the painter's brush will not only improve and preserve these buildings but will greatly enhance the attractiveness of the municipality.

The necessity of trimming the decayed limbs of trees along the municipal highways has been more than once pointed out in these Perhaps when someone is injured and the Township is sued for damages the public will awaken to the dangerous condition of some of the old oaks and demand more safety. A decayed limb is a menace to the life and limb of every person who passes beneath.

There is no better discipline in the training of children than the old-fashioned "spellingbee," which has become an annual event in Hamilton Township. It emphasizes the value 2,500. of thorough drilling in orthography and provides a mental stimulus to the contestants that is very beneficial. If more schools would less demand for "simplified" spelling. English words are not so difficult to spell, if the proper training is received in youth.

Vivisection is said to be "quite a fad" in some city school courses. "The children take great delight in dissecting animals and i sects." And this in an age of enlightenment? Viviscetion itself is cruel and quite needless; but when innocent children are taught to cut up animals and "take delight" in such degrading work, it is time to call a halt somewhere. What are some of our public schools trying to do with the children, anyway? 'Perhaps the writing and arithmetic.

The old man's advice, "Plant a tree, Joekit'll grow while ye're sleeping," contains a moral, one too generally neglected. While we are endeavoring to preserve the old trees, we forget offtimes that in the course of time they will die, and neglect to supply young trees to take their place. There are many places along our public agenues, and more still on private property, where young trees can be planted to advantage. Now is the time to provide for the future. The old trees cannot live forever and when they are gone-what then? "Better take the old man's advice, Jock ?"

The Last of the Batch

She Knew the Man She Wanted and She Got Him.

By HARRIET L. GEDDIS.

 "In the early days of the Colorado minin' camps," said the old prospector, "one of the best payin' holes in the groun' before it ran out was the Last Hope mine. Its name was given it by the man who struck it, who was much down at the heels at the time and fully intended that if it didn't relies his necessities he would hang himself to the limb of a tree that extended directly over it. He sold his claim for $100,000 to a company and retires first off from this here story.

"The president of the Last Hope lived in the east and sent out a manager from that region. Mr. Parkhurst, among other things, at home had been superintendent of a Sunday school. Naturally he didn't like the appearance of a Colorado minin' camp. The cussin' that was going on was just like fireworks. The saloons did a better business than the store. Whenever the wind riz the playin' cards filled the air like a snowstorm. As for Sunday, there was no work-on that day, but instead of services there was gamblin'. There was a few women in the camp, but they was worse'n the

"Mr. Parkhurst looked the ground over and sized up the situation. What that camp needed was wives. He argled that men without the restrainin' influence of women would naturally turn into wild animals, and he resolved to send for some gals. He called the miners together and told 'em that if they would turn out the women there was in camp he would send for a carload of real good, true members of the female sex to be helpmeets for who had specepeded blue as head of bls. dozen of the best behaved and best lookin' young women she could pick up. Her influence was far more needed in the west than where she was. Husbands would be provided

"Miss Bowers, a middle aged, conscientious woman, concluded that it was her duty to accept the situation and proceeded to collect a dozen-young women who would rather get married than work. She also shipped several hundred Bibles and hymn books. The company paid all expenses and give each gal a hundred dollars to sit up housekeepin' with.

"The day Miss Bowers arrived with them twelve gals was a screamer. Not a man would work, and every one of 'em went to the tayern where the coach was to unload. While they was waitin' Ben Huggins, an old feller who was a leader among 'em, made 'em a speech remindin' 'em that they gaustn't be in too much of a hurry to wed and that gals liked to be court ed. There wasn't enough gals to go round by any means, but any fightip for 'em would spoil the whole business. If the men behaved right an other lot would be provided; if they die it those who had come would go

Then the couch drove up to the tar in door there was a yell. Some of the gals was on top, and they was mighty good lookin'. Them miners hadn't seen a decent woman in yearssome of 'em-and they wasn't used to such beauty. It was like angels comin' down from heaven. The men was respectful, you bet. There's no place? where a good woman is so reverenced as where she's a rarity. A way was opened from the coach to the tavern, and the gals went inside, but there was sich a howl for 'em that they come out on to a balcony and stood there, while the men at an order from Huggins, the old feller who had spoken to 'em a short time before, took off their hats. The gals looked kind of funny, as if not knowin' what to make of the reception.

"If the manager had sent for enough gals to go round in the first place there wouldn't likely have been any trouble. As it was, several of the most desperate men each saw among the lot a gal he wanted, and some of 'em wanted the same gal. The gals hadn't more'n gone back into the tayern before there was half a dozen fights. Huggins he goes off to the

"Mr. Parkhurst looked glum. 'You forget, Huggins,' he said, 'that a wo-, man has the right to marry whom she chooses. To raffle them would be to give them away without their consent;

That wouldn't do at all." "Well, Mr. Parkhurst, all I've got to say is that if something isn't done, and that pretty quick, there won't be enough men left to furnish husbands for this lot of gals.' "'I'm afraid we'll have to send the women back,' said Mr. Parkhurst, "'I reckon,' said Huggins, seratchin' his head, 'we moght git the men to draw lots for a chance to git some one on 'em.'

"'That's a good idea; try lt." "Huggins went away and called a mass meetin' of the suitors. He told them that a dozen men must be chosen by lot to offer themselves each to a girl. * fought for their chance; but, recognizin' the delicacy of the situation and the plan bein' the nearest that could be suggested to a raffle, it was unanimously approved. Blanks and ten prize slips were placed in a hat and ten men were selected. Every one of the lucky ten was ordered to black his boots, take his trousers out of them, wear a coat if he had one and report at the tavern that evenin' for introduction by Miss Bowers.

"The next mornin' Mr. Parkhurst called for Huggins.

Well, Huggins,' he said when the old man appeared, how did it turn out last night?

"'At the courtin'? Tol'able, sir, tol'able. Three men proposed to gals as tuk 'em, four men was too er'nary to go down with any of the gals, two men wanted the same gal and was killed in a shootin' match afterwards. One man got up on his ear with a gal who wouldn't have him and said he had a wife already in Frisco and didn't want no more of 'em. This leaves seven gals for the next drawin' and three men less to be provided for.' "Seven names were next drawn and
