The old brick schoolhouse had grown into a stone structure several stories in height. There was a new Methodist church, and many of the old houses had been replaced by more imposing structures, while in the business section the store fronts had been altered to present a metropolitan aspect.

It was not until after lunch and Paul had started out into the country that looked up none of his old friends, fearing to find them as sadly changed as the village itself.

There was a trolley now to take him dumh to the outskirts of the town, but he dropped of when the canal bridge came in sight and the trolley turned on the road to the river. The bridge was not changed. It was the same low, white structure from which he had dropped many a time to the deck of some passing canalboat to ride down to the lock and beg a ride back Beyond the bridge, too, the road looked the same. The trend of progress had been along the line of the -irolley, and on this side of the canal the farmhouses were unchanged.

They had not even mended the break in the fence where he formerly slipped through for the short cut to the marsh. Here the largest frogs were always to be caught, and Paul was templed to push through just to see if he still was slender enough who was also the postmaster of the borough, began the transaction of business one morning about a year ago he found that the safe in which were kept the postage stamps had been robbed during the night and promptly reported the matter to the proper authorities. The latter decided, after an investigation, that restitution should be made for the stolen stamps, but that the expense of repairing the damage to the safe would have to be borne by the storekeeper, which was accordingly done. Some time later a second robbery was committed and reported, as before, as the result of which there was an other investigation, which disclosed the fact that the stamper had been abstracted on this occasion without any violence to the safe. "But how was it dono?" asked the inspector, somewhat possied. "The ate does not seem to be injured at all. "I made up my mind I would not be caught again," replied the p alyly. "I left if open."

A Lost Bank Note. A friend of mine, writes a Scotth correspondent, recently saw a nices of paper lying on the street. He picked it up. It was a one pound note. Some men might have pocketed it, with a smile of satisfaction. My friend, however, honestly handed it over to the police. A short time afterward he discovered that he himself had lost a pound He thought over the matter and remembered that before finding the note he had been standing on the edge of the pavement for some time. It slowly dawned upon him that the pound he had found was his own and that he had drawn it from his pocket unconsciously. He went back promptly to the police station and explained the circumstance. The officer in charge only shook his head and smiled increduldusly. "Very clever," he said, "but-eh-it will scarcely do." If my friend cared to call back at the end of six months, he was informed, he would get the pound if in the interval it had not been claimed. During this time of waiting he is inclined to meditate as to whether honesty is always the best policy.-London P. T. O.

In Case of Accident.

Don't bluster. Be tactful. If there are dangerous germs present, ask them to withdraw. If they demur, ask them where they were brought up with gentle irony

Be careful to render first aid to the injured. A great deal of unnecessary suffering has been caused by persons hastily rendering third or; even fourth aid where first aid was indicated. In case of drowning select a best method of resuscitation. There are 4.639 best methods in all. Have them about you in the form of loose newspaper clippings and run them over briefly before acting. Keep cool. Stop every little while and take your temperature.

If the coroner arrives while you are at work, immediately desist. It is discourteous to save life in his presence. Take accurate notes of the street and number. Reviving patients almost always ask where they are. If possible, induce death to super vene rather than to take place merely or even to ensue. It gives the families a sense of dignity .-- Puck.
