Wait for Me.

Beward runs the little stream
When the wagon cools his team,
Where, between the banks of moss,
Stands the stepping-stones to cross,
Over the brook, the waterless brook,
Laughing not a bit afraid;
Mother, there upon the shore,
Crossed them safely just before,
The waterless brook.
Wait for me, wait for me!

Ah, so swift the water runs—
One false step, 'twas all undone!
Little heart began to beat,
Panting for the little feet;
Saw the waterless brook, lost,
When the stepping-stones are crossed,
Three more yet on which to stand—
Two more more, more than on land!

Wait for me, wait for me!

As, for you, my laughing lass,
When the years have come to pass,
May One still be here to guide
While you cross life's wide wide,
With me, your heart will never run.
None, if you should call to hear—
Think, however, far away,
Mother all know you say;
When heaven has its pleasure,
Wait for me, wait for me!

ESSIE.

"If I only had a piano!"
Even as the wish rose almost unconsciously to her lips, Essie Trowbridge blushed, deep crimson tint, and shy eyes looked out half frightened from under the long lashes.

"A piano?"
The depth of sarcasm in John Trowbridge's voice justified the shrinking of his little daughter-in-law.

"A piano! Wouldn't you like a diamond necklace or a carriage with four horses? This is one of the results of a piano lesson, and it's a fine result."

"I was not a fanatical woman when Henry married me, only a hard working district school teacher," said Essie, "and he was kind and good, and never sneered at me because I loved music and pictures, and—al the other pleasant uses I had before my father died!"

"Well, there, there, don't cry," said the old man. "It need not mean to hurt your feelings, Harry."

But there the father choked, too, for was not Harry, his only child, the very idol of his old heart, lying in the churchyard, and the six months' widow sobbing beside him?"

She rose softly from her seat, and crossing to where her father-in-law sat, said gently:

"I will not try you again by extravagance desire. I know how good you are to me, and I will try to learn to be a better farmer's girl!"

"You are a very good girl," was the reply, "and it is only natural you should hanker for what you've been brought up to having. But Harry cost us a fortune of dollars, and I have no time to earn them. I can't get round the farm as Harry did, and I have had him to lean upon so long that things go crooked enough without him!"

Essie sighed, caressing the snowy hair her shy, brown eyes full of trouble. She knew that the farm was suffering for want of money, and eyes lying folded forever, and shamed to be of some use to the father she had promised Harry to love and comfort.

But she was only twenty, city bred and reared in luxury. Just one year she taught a district school after her father died a bankrupt. Then Harry Trowbridge, the handsome, tender farmer, who met her in the country-house where she "boarded round," told her his love and won the sweet, pure heart's affection.

Only a few months' after the wedding when Essie was conquering one by one the difficulties of farm housekeeping, Harry fell from a hay-wagon and was fatally injured.

In the few hours of life granted him, his dying words were to keep his father, and his young wife, together, to love and comfort each other.

"You will give Essie a home when I am gone," he begged, when his father bent over him.

"While I have a roof to cover me," was the answer.

"You will leave my father utterly alone," he whispered, when Essie put her cheek to his to hide the tears that would fall.

"I will never leave him while my love is my comfort," she answered.

And in the first days of mourning these two were an unutterable comfort to each other. But as time wore on they found themselves through pieces in the mail, exchanged their griefs and blinding.

John Trowbridge had a profound contempt for all womankind who could not fill his own rough ideal. A woman who could churn, milk, cook, care for poultry, keep a house shining, wash and iron, and keep in perfect, robust health withal, was a woman after his own heart. A starving mind, a hungry soul, was his problem she had never realized as existing.

It forced him when Essie, bravely striving to do the work so new in her experience, would faint at her post. It roused his rough sarcasm when the day closed upon duties unperformed, when bread was heavy and cooking imperfect.

And when he began to hope to grow stronger, made himself miserable in the supposition that she was a useless burden where she so earnestly desired to be a comfort and blessing. She stifled her own craving for the books and refinements that had been second nature; and yet she could not fill the place they had occupied by interest in church, and the town.

It added to her complexities to know that the farm had not paid its expenses in the last year. Spring was still some weeks away, and provisions were growing scarce, while ready money was dwindling down to a pile alarmingly small. She felt like a thief when a baking proved uneatable, or a dinner was spoiled, and yet such disasters occurred in spite of her conscientious efforts to avert them.

But they did not know that a strong armed Irish girl could be paid to do the work of the house out of Essie's income, and that a trusty man was found to take the farm-work on shares.

The Trowbridge man, that had been her life's delight too, possession of her. Her penitence for the words was very humble, and she put away the desire with many another longing.

But John Trowbridge, though he was a stern man, and often rough, had a kind heart under the hard crust gathered over it in ten years of poverty paid.

The longing of the shy brown eyes haunted him.

"I suppose it is like telling the birds not to sing, to shut her up here," he thought. "But to give her a piano in the world—"

At a sudden thought almost took away his breath. He got up from his chair, and kissing Essie went to the door to think it over. The old widow, warned that it was nearly tea-time by the clock, sped to the kitchen, and did not know where her father-in-law put on his overcoat and hat and went down to the village.

He came back with some great profection in every line of his rugged, sun-brown face.

Essie was a success. The toast was delicately browned, and the ham done over a turn. When the meal was over the old man said:

"Essie, do you remember the cross I told you my father gave you for a birthday gift?"

"A piano!"

The depth of sarcasm in John Trowbridge's voice justified the shrinking of his little daughter-in-law.

"A piano! Wouldn't you like a diamond necklace or a carriage with four horses? This is one of the results of a piano lesson, and it's a fine result."

"I was not a fanatical woman when Henry married me, only a hard working district school teacher," said Essie, "and he was kind and good, and never sneered at me because I loved music and pictures, and—al the other pleasant uses I had before my father died!"

"Well, there, there, don't cry," said the old man. "It need not mean to hurt your feelings, Harry."

But there the father choked, too, for was not Harry, his only child, the very idol of his old heart, lying in the churchyard, and the six months' widow sobbing beside him?"

She rose softly from her seat, and crossing to where her father-in-law sat, said gently:

"I will not like to part with it? Perhaps it is your only reminder of your father?"

"No. I have many other of his gifts. Nothing so valuable as that. The gentleman who took charge of my father's affairs told me I could keep all his gifts to me."

"You—you would not like to give me the cross to sell, Essie? Our money is getting very short—"

A kiss, tender and quick, stopped the words that came so hesitatingly.

"You are gladly welcome to it, father. I wonder I did not think of it before."

So the dainty blouse lay in the farm-hornysalm, and while Essie cleared the tea-table John Trowbridge went once more to the village.

Dr. Reynolds, the only physician there, Harry's fast friend for years, was in his office when the farmer entered.

"There it is!" said the visitor triumphantly. "You are sure it is worth the money?"

"Perfectly sure. And Mrs. Trowbridge wishes me to invest the sum I obtain in a piano?"

When he had heard all the old man said:

"Go to Essie, Ernest, and tell her the one wish of my heart will be granted if when I die I leave her in the happiness of such love as you bring to her. It has been my great sorrow that her short life was not sad, and not so loud but John Trowbridge in the porch, as that gentlewoman spoke in deep heartfelt tones.

"I will let me keep my promise to Harry, Ernest? I could not desert father now?"

"I only ask to help you in your care for a piano, and she shall have one, Ernest," and the old man's eyes filled, "her own father gave her that gimmerick, and I've seen her kiss it often, but when I asked her if she'd give it to me, to me, I needed money, she put it in my pocket, and I have no time to earn it. I was glad welcome. She's a good girl, if she ain't much of a hand at work."

"She is a very good girl," was the reply, "and it is only natural you should hanker for what you've been brought up to having. But Harry cost us a fortune of dollars, and I have no time to earn them. I can't get round the farm as Harry did, and I have had him to lean upon so long that things go crooked enough without him!"

Terrorizing a Train.

Short Engagement Played by a Gang of Texas Desperadoes.

News from Waco, Texas, says: A quartet of desperadoes played a sly engagement on the south line of the Santa Fe, to terrorize the passengers.

They were men of some value in the world who possessed but a small share of bone and muscle for actual hard work. For scholars came all the way from L——, the market town, seven miles away, to the farm-house. Concerts were given for charitable purposes, and Essie was engaged at good pay. She was a very good girl, and the words were well-chosen.

But John Trowbridge, though he was a stern man, and often rough, had a kind heart under the hard crust gathered over it in ten years of poverty paid.

The young girl, who had been engaged at good pay, was a very good girl, and the words were well-chosen.

The Republican.

Entered as second class matter.

JAMM VTON, ATLANTIC CO., N.J.

SATURDAY, FEB. 20, 1886.

The Reading Room.

The natural condition of the human mind is activity, and the result of this mental activity is growth—development. The nature of this development depends upon the kind of food supplied to the mind. Given the right kind of mental food, and the growth of the mind will be upward, toward higher and nobler objects. This kind of growth is desirable for any community, for whatever ennobles the individual, elevates the community of which the individual is a unit.

Believing these things to be true, and actuated by a desire to promote the best interests of our community, some of our citizens have formed a plan for establishing a place where all, and especially our young men, may spend their spare time pleasantly and profitably; where they may meet and enjoy each other's society, and have within their reach the means of improving their mental and moral natures. For this purpose, an organization has been formed to establish Public Reading Room and Library. Pleasant, well-furnished rooms for reading, conversation, and games, an abundant supply of daily and weekly newspapers, a choice selection of illustrated magazines of science and literature, absolutely free to all, and a well-stocked library open to all upon the payment of a small sum, these will constitute the principal advantages which the Association will offer to the public.

Feeling that this is a matter of public interest, and not of private enterprise, the Association takes this opportunity to present to the public its aims, objects and needs. All who have been approached on this subject have expressed themselves favorably to the undertaking, and all agree that, carried forward properly and successfully, it will be a great benefit to the town at large, more especially to our people, young and old, who do not enjoy the advantages of pleasant homes. Of course, like all similar efforts for the public good, this will require active effort on the part of some, and the sympathy as well as financial support of many others, for a time at least. To meet this, subscriptions are being taken, pledged to be paid annually for not less than three years; and so generous have been the amounts received, thus far, that those interested have felt warranted in proceeding at once to organize and open the Reading Room temporarily, in Rutherford's front store room, where will be accessible to all (from 10 A.M. to 10 P.M.) the New York and Philadelphia daily papers, weeklies, magazines, etc. The management is placed in the hands of a Board of Trustees (who are also the officers of the Association) selected annually by the members. The following persons were elected for the present year:

President.—C. H. Wilson.
Vice-President.—W. B. Matthews.
Secretary.—Edward Whiffen.
Treasurer.—A. W. Cochran.
Executive Committee.—W. A. Millar, D. S. Cunningham, Wm. Rutherford.

These gentlemen, being representative citizens of our town, active business men, and thoroughly interested in the success of this movement, will, we feel sure, not only gain the confidence of our people as to the successful operation of the Association, but also begat hearty co-operation.

The managers, through their Soliciting Committee (Messrs. Henry Whiffen, Wm. Bernhouse, Wm. Rutherford, R. D. Whitmore, and W. R. Wilson) will be pleased to receive contributions of any amount, up to twenty-five dollars, —this sum making the contributor a life member. Books, periodicals, anything that will add morally to the attractiveness of the rooms, will be received gladly.

CONSTITUTION.
ART. I.—Object. The object of this Association is to establish and maintain a Public Reading Room and Library.

ART. II.—Name. This Association shall be known as the Hammonton Reading Room and Library Association.

CIRCEUS OF INDIA.

Do not herald the sacrifices you make to each other's tastes, habits or preferences.

Let all our mutual accommodations be spontaneous, whole-souled and free as air.

Alexander being asked how he compares the world, replied, "By no means."

Virtue requires no other recompense than the tribute of self-approbation and respect.

He needs no other rosary whose thread of life is strung with beads of love and thoughts.

One is never conscientious during action; only the looker-on has a conscience.

Ille temper and smoke are about equal in their ability to drive a man out of the house.

You can no more get good by doing evil than you can get wool from a hyacinth root.

To know how to listen is a great art; it is to know how to gain instruction from every one.

A hesitating or grum yielding to the wishes of the other always grieves upon a loving heart.

Those who marry for physical characteristics or external considerations will fall of happiness.

Consult one another in all that comes within the experience, observation or sphere of the other.

Trust him little who praises all; him less who censures all, and him least of all who censures him.

They run over two-hands of the universe, the past and the future, while reality is confined to the present.

Domestic life is founded upon truth and love. If it has not both of these it is nothing better than a despotism.

"I can't do it," never did anything; "I will try," has worked wonders; and "I will do it," has performed miracles.

Some there who gaze intently into the web of truth but only in hopes of seeing the reflected light.

Never reflect upon the action which was done with a good motive and with the best judgment at the time.

The beautiful in heart, is a million times of more avail in securing domestic happiness than the beautiful person.

There are some human tongues which have two sides like that of certain quadrupeds, one smooth, and the other rough.

Man is in friendship what woman is in love, and the reverse, namely, more covetous of the object than of the feeling.

Heaven's gates are wide enough to admit every sinner in the universe who is penitent but too narrow to admit a single sinner.

Shame does not consist in having nothing to eat, but in not having wisdom enough to exempt you from fear and sorrow.

It may be slightly Hibernian, but it is nevertheless true, that the best way to shut out the faults of your friends is to shut out your eyes.

A man might not so much as risk that it is a coincidence?" Director canasser.

"The explanation is simple. You manufacture plug to tobacco; ergo you are a chewmaker too."

"Why, don't you see, they drop an arrest from arrest and it becomes a rest."

DIRECTOR CANASSEY.—"And your occupation, please?" Household manufacturer of plug tobacco.

Director Canasser, "Rather a singular coincidence, she makes shoes for men who makes shoes."

"The explanation is simple. She makes shoes, and therefore a shoe-maker. You manufacture plug to tobacco; ergo you are a chewmaker too."

"No inquest, then?"

"What a pretty mink cloak you have, Mrs. Dunley," said Mrs. Doocott.

"I'm glad you like it, dear."

"Yes, indeed, I do. I believe I'll put one to do my marketing and such running about in, and keep my sealskin for social visits."

BUSTLES are getting larger and larger. If they keep on growing it will be hard to tell whether a lady is taking her bustle with her down town or whether the bustle wants to take a walk for its health and is pushing the lady along in front of it.
