EDITOR REPUBLICAN:—I send you the following, received from my brother in Greene, Chenango County, N. Y. It might interest some of your readers, as showing what pluck combined with capital will do:

Mr. A. B. Robison, of this town, is one of the largest egg and poultry dealers in the United States, besides being a large farmer. I will give you some of the statistics of his business. He owns 700 acres of land, mostly under cultivation, keeping between eighty and ninety cows, besides others stock. His help costs him over $3000 per year. His average stock of eggs, for a number of years, has been about two thousand barrels of eighty dozen each, making about 160,000 dozen, at a cost of about $32,000. His poultry varies from 12,000 to 17,000 head of different species, as geese, ducks, turkeys, and hens. One season, three years ago, his daily feed was sixty bushels of corn, besides some other stuffs. His poultry is fattened, dressed and frozen, and packed for the Spring market. His eggs are held in a refrigerator built of stone, 35 x 50 feet, 50 feet high, giving room for eggs below and about 600 tons of ice above. He has eight men on the road most of the time, buying eggs and poultry.

In making butter, the milk is passed, while still warm, into a cylindrical separator, which revolves very rapidly, separating the cream from the milk by centrifugal force, forcing the milk out at one opening and the cream at another, the cream being left to cool and sour before churning.

My brother neglected to state the quantity of butter made, or what disposition is made of refuse milk. He has been engaged with Mr. Robison some ten years, and knows whereof he speaks.
Yours, L. HOYT.

Nearly all that we know we accept on the testimony of somebody else. If those who have never tried Dr. Walker's California V. negar Bitters, and are suffering from dyspepsia, bilious or other fevers, kidney or other complaint, or from impure blood, will receive the testimony of the many thousands who have tried the Bitters, and been cured, they will be acting wisely.

It is reported that Mr. A. E. Gordon, of the New Brunswick Times, has been selected by the President for the United States Marshalship of this state, but the appointment will not be made until District Attorney Kearsbey's term expires, which will be in a few days, when Mr. Job H. Lippincott, of Jersey City, will be nominated to succeed him.

Once in a while Land Commissioner Sparks astonishes himself by making a decision that does not get upset by Secretary Lamar.

In sentencing several liquor dealers for keeping disorderly houses, Judge Stewart, at Mercer Court, on Friday, said: "The rule will be to fine parties $50 and costs for the first offence, and on a repetition of the offence to send them to State Prison. We are determined to see the liquor laws enforced, appeals for clemency will be in vain."

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Every good deed is a grain of seed for eternal life. Sleep is the best stimulant, a nervous case for all to take. Resist not the law; they are the safeguards of the people.

MEXICO.

The Congress closed in 1893. It was the Congress of about Sixty Members. Mexico is nominally governed by a Congress, first called September 14, 1813, which has probably seen as many vicissitudes as any assembly on earth has ever seen in the same time.

Lily Langtry's Father.

St. Paul is a clean little city, well paved and lighted. Its inhabitants are very proud of it, and, albeit they have never crossed to the Continent in their life, they tell you flatteringly that they are the best of the world.

HORSE NOTES.

—Morlock's record is 2 2/3 to harness, and a public trial under the saddle in 2 1/2. —The cherry and black of Pierre Lorillard will be borne by Matt Byrnes horses.

FACTETLE.

THE BOY WITH THE BOUQUET.—A sharp lad of fourteen started out two or three weeks ago with a two-shilling bouquet in his hand and rang the door-bell of a house occupied by a widow.

THE BRIDE OF DEATH.

Walter Burnham was the son of a wealthy New York merchant. Miss Agnes Draine was a beautiful brunette of twenty summers. She was the only child of Mrs. Genevieve Draine a widow lady of wealth.

FASHION NOTES.

—Crush hats for ladies are made of corded silk. —Pink shepherd's plaid is embroidered with black. —Mikado satens is in all colors with Japanese designs.

THE BRIDE OF DEATH.

When Walter announced his sudden marriage to his lady-mother she was greatly shocked. "Good heavens!" she exclaimed, in consternation, "you have been deceived."

THE BRIDE OF DEATH.

Enclosed in the same envelope, was a letter addressed to Mrs. Draine, this had been written by Agnes, and its first sentence was the mother's name. She simply opened her "sealed birth," never once upbidding her mother for the discreditable connection.

When we see a horse, at this season of the year, with his hair clipped close, we can scarcely refrain from wishing that the horse's owner might be dressed in a suit of mohair and be compelled to walk a mile or two in these brisk March winds.

Mr. Estlin - This place still has an extensive and is likely to be more so. Our people are making an effort to let our advantages be known a "good bit" beyond our limits, having concluded that printing is sometimes quite useful.

The First Snowfall.

The snow had begun in the gloaming. And bustly all the night had been heaping drift and highway...

Every pine and fir and hemlock. Evermine too dear for an Earl. And the poorest twig on the elm tree...

From about new roof with Carrara. The stiff sails were softened to wags' down. And still dither'd down the snow.

It stood and watch'd by the window. The bushes were white and snow-birds. And the sudden furtive of snow birds...

Up spoke our own little Mabel. Saying, "Father, who makes it snow?" And I told her the poet. All father who cares for us here below.

Again I look'd at the snow fall. And thought of the leaden sky. And thought of the great snow when that round was heap'd so high.

I remember the gradual patience. That fell from that cloud like snow. Flake by flake, heaving and hiding...

And again to the child I whisper'd. The snow that pisseth at. Darling, the merciful Father! Alone can make it fall!

PLAYING A BULL.

The Hon. Gus Trenorack knew life—at least he thought so, and it certainly looked like it; for he had managed to live sumptuously on next to nothing for some years.

He was a man of a certain type, a certain one of the best looking, and certainly one of the best looking, he had called charmingly through life.

As she looked at her brother now she could not help feeling almost as she did when she was a girl, and she was sure she would have to play in any new scheme of his would not be an honorable one.

He felt aggrieved, and considered, like many another man not so clever as he, that the times were really on the joint, and that girls, new-fashioned ideas, education of the masses, unit lands, and hard-up fathers, life was becoming every day more difficult.

Then Gus sat over the fire in his chambers, looking into the embers and reviewing the situation. Evidently his thoughts were not pleasant for he poked the fire savagely and muttered through his clenched teeth:

"Curse it all, I am tired of life! Even the soothing influence of a good cigar had no charms for him now, and he allowed it to burn out, and then threw it viciously into the grate.

"Twenty thousand pounds!" she ejaculated, in astonishment. "Twenty thousand pounds! I don't understand it, Gus, and you needn't. He will, soon enough. Just say you have enough money to pay differences or carry over. He will never ask you to deposit securities, if you spoon him properly. I will take care that he drinks enough before I give you your opportunity."

"What do you propose doing?" asked Constance, leaning her book. "I'm up to my ears in speculation and want to make a lump of money with the couple of thousand you have laid at the bank. Just get him to promise to let you into the firm and to put a big lot on the Stock Exchange."

"Do you think he will do it?" "If you play him properly he will to a certainty. I will then give the tip to a fellow I know, who will put a pile on for me. But now, Con! I shall go for matters over, and you can think matters over."

must be dreaming. Why, they are all so sharp there." "So much the better. You remember Samuel Jones?" "That horrid looking Jew?" "That horrid looking Jew, as you call him, by the by, he says he is a Christian."

"Christian or Jew, it is all the same. I wonder you are seen with him. He does not play or load money, does he?" "Not as much as Rothschild, and he admires you, Con."

"Admires me—that fellow?" said the Hon. Constance, tossing her head in high disdain. "I will have him here to dinner to-morrow, and you must be attentive to him; put on that pretty smile and charming manner that you wear when you want to bowl a fellow over," continued her brother, calmly.

"Marry the fellow with the money, Con; do not be a silly fool! Five thousand a year cannot be caught every day. Her romance cannot, as those impractical romances generally end, in nothing; or rather, in Jack emigrating to Australia and being completely forgotten, and in Constance being single at 47, and perfectly willing to marry any average man with sufficient to keep her."

"I have a high respect for our old nobility," said Jones. "Just so—all rich men have. By-the-by, I don't know if you are married?" "You are not a chelikon, you are not!" "I suppose I shall some day, soon."

"How such a lot of nice girls," continued Gus, "and you are not married? You are not a chelikon, you are not!" "I suppose I shall some day, soon."

"You are not a chelikon, you are not!" "I suppose I shall some day, soon." "You are not a chelikon, you are not!" "I suppose I shall some day, soon."

"When at the door he turned to his sister and said: "For the rose-colored sland on the lamp, Con. Have a roaring fire and sprinkle a lot perfume about. I will make him drink plenty of wine. Good-bye!"

Samuel Jones was delighted to dine with the Hon. Gus Trenorack, and the dinner was excellent. Constance was charming and smiled and talked to him all the time he kept his glass well filled, and before dinner was over the fair Constance had half her work done.

As she left the dining room, her brother, who was highly pleased, opened the door and he went out, and nodded in approval.

"The two men now pulled their chairs around the fire, and lighting their cigars sat in the easy chairs, Miss Trenorack, but one must know it; I should be ruined if it got out."

"Oh, it will be so secret! Do tell me when it will all come off! Oh, this is charming!" "I will tell you before we operate," replied Jones, cautiously, though intently gratified.

"Do promise me one thing; dine with us the night you operate, and you call it, and I will sing or do anything for you. Do promise, won't you?" "Yes, with pleasure," said Jones, decidedly.

"Oh, thanks, how good it is of you! What can I do to repay you?" "You can do a great deal," he said, smiling.

"Can I? Do tell me what it is?" "If Jones intended to propose he had no time now, for the Hon. Gus awoke at that moment with a start, and said to the two men: "What are you doing here? You are not a chelikon, you are not!"

"I will then give the tip to a fellow I know, who will put a pile on for me. But now, Con! I shall go for matters over, and you can think matters over."

"When at the door he turned to his sister and said: "For the rose-colored sland on the lamp, Con. Have a roaring fire and sprinkle a lot perfume about. I will make him drink plenty of wine. Good-bye!"

Samuel Jones was delighted to dine with the Hon. Gus Trenorack, and the dinner was excellent. Constance was charming and smiled and talked to him all the time he kept his glass well filled, and before dinner was over the fair Constance had half her work done.

As she left the dining room, her brother, who was highly pleased, opened the door and he went out, and nodded in approval.

"The two men now pulled their chairs around the fire, and lighting their cigars sat in the easy chairs, Miss Trenorack, but one must know it; I should be ruined if it got out."

"Oh, it will be so secret! Do tell me when it will all come off! Oh, this is charming!" "I will tell you before we operate," replied Jones, cautiously, though intently gratified.

"Do promise me one thing; dine with us the night you operate, and you call it, and I will sing or do anything for you. Do promise, won't you?" "Yes, with pleasure," said Jones, decidedly.

"Oh, thanks, how good it is of you! What can I do to repay you?" "You can do a great deal," he said, smiling.

"Can I? Do tell me what it is?" "If Jones intended to propose he had no time now, for the Hon. Gus awoke at that moment with a start, and said to the two men: "What are you doing here? You are not a chelikon, you are not!"

"You are not a chelikon, you are not!" "I suppose I shall some day, soon." "You are not a chelikon, you are not!" "I suppose I shall some day, soon."
