Loyalty and Royalty.

There have been a few striking instances in history of preachers who have reproved kings unflinchingly. Joseph Parker, of the City Temple, London, has added another striking and dramatic example.

In a late sermon he referred to the King's recent brewing of beer while visiting Lord Burton, — his first ceremonial call after passing from the period of mourning being made on this brewer. "Pray for me," said Dr. Parker, "that I may speak delicately, loyally. If the king brews beer, what can be wrong in the subjects drinking it? What the king does is likely to be imitated by others. His majesty is more than a man, and must regard all questions from a kingly standpoint."

Wields a Sharp Axe.

"Millions marvel at the multitude of maladies cut off by Dr. King's New Life Pills,—the most distressing, too. Liver, stomach and bowel troubles, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, jaundice, biliousness, fever, malaria, all fall before these wonder workers." 25 cents, at Rogers' drug store.

Good for Rheumatism.

Last Fall I was taken with a very severe attack of muscular rheumatism which caused me great pain and annoyance. After trying several prescriptions and rheumatic cures, I decided to use Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which I had seen advertised in the South Jerseyman. After two applications of this remedy I was much better, and after using one bottle was completely cured. — HARRY HANUS, Salem, N. J. For sale by J. S. Rogers.

Bicycles on Sidewalks.

Owing to the disregard of the law relating to bicycle riding, the Committee on Law and Order, of Council, has appointed me special policeman, with authority to make arrests.

I am serving without pay, at the request of citizens who consider it necessary to protect themselves and others from danger.

I hereby warn all bicycle riders not to ride on sidewalks, under penalty of the law. It might as well be understood that riders have no right on sidewalks whatever, whether roads are good or bad. A bicycle is a wheeled vehicle, riders claiming the privilege of such on the roads. There must be no riding on sidewalks under any circumstances.

Citizens are requested to give their assistance in putting an end to the nuisance of riding on sidewalks, by reporting to me any violation of the law in that respect. Get the names of violators, and I will make complaint and send the constable to arrest them, or arrest them myself.

All bicycles must have lanterns at night. Riding at a speed faster than eight miles an hour, on roads, is also unlawful. I trust that every good citizen will assist in this work.

P. H. JACOBS.

There will be an election of officers at the regular quarterly meeting of the Lyceum, next Monday evening. The debate will be open, i. e., no disputant will be appointed. The question is, "Resolved, That women should be paid the same wages as men, for the same work." A new feature will be introduced in the programme of entertainment.

ADVERTISEMENTS in this size type, one half cent per word for each insertion. No charge less than 10 cents.

Rogers' Pharmacy

FERRI MANGAN

(solution Peptonate of Iron and Manganese)

Or Pepto-Mangan.

Each fluid ounce contains: Peptonate of Iron, 20 grains; Saccharated Sesquioxide Manganese, 4 grains. This preparation is quickly absorbed by the system into the blood, and restores to it the Haemoglobin and corpuscles to the normal proportion. For Anaemia, Chlorosis, general debility, the blood is enriched, appetite increased, and if persistently used, the weight increases to a notable extent after about one month's use. A feeling of warmth is produced particularly agreeable to elderly persons, or anyone whose system is run down from any cause. A pint bottle, 70 cents.

ROGERS'

Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites.

Very valuable where pulmonary tuberculosis is indicated, or trouble with the respiratory organs is felt. Also acts as a general tonic and stimulant. 75 cents per bottle.

BROTHERHOOD.

Dream of the long, long ago,
Dream of the wide, wide world;
What you might have done for me,
What you might have done for me,
Across those countless centuries,
Wherever man has trod,
To him has come a dream of hope,
As came the breath of God.

The glow of the pioneer,
The sailor's glancing look,
The burning words of eloquence,
The soldier's front of steel;
New armies march, new nations rise,
New banners gleam and gleam—
The very words revolve in space,
And answer to a dream.

That star the watchful shepherds saw,
Has never yet grown dim,
Each age has heard the angels sing
Their joyous advent hymn,
And ever the faithful word,
Has dawned in light and cheer,
Bore with each living birth—
Part of each farewell tear.

And this is the one, one heritage
That holds us in its grasp,
The warm fingers of the present
In the hand-clasp of the past.
Where their old-time fathers trod,
And one and all the sons of men,
In hoping face their God, Chicago, June 1900.

Four Years After.

She was drawing unusual patterns
On the path with the tip of her parol, and seemed engrossed in the red of the lamp-light showing a trifle gray.

"Joan," he said. Then he stopped.
After four years her men were a striking start.

She turned her head, and the color deep across her cheeks, leaving them pale.

"Joan," he said again.

By a little accident her parol slipped.
In the moment of her stooping she recovered her balance. When he raised his head her smile was calm.

"Peter," she said. And the word seemed to carry everything and to imply everything that was most realized in a flash that she was

"I give you credit for that," perfect and improved. He felt that he had learned the knack of things.

"Peter," she said, "and after all this age of time."

"Four years," he said, laconically.
"How exact!" She blushed again and raised her hand, touching her cheek.
"Am I very—very prehistoric, Peter?" she laughed.

He studied her. "In a sense," he said,
"perhaps."
"Peter?"

"Well, some women make history, you know." He looked fixedly at the bed of matrimony by his foot.

She glanced up, but even to her accomplished eyes there was nothing to be seen.

"What," she said, "what have you to tell me? The world is bigger to you now than it used to be."

"And to you?"

"O, I find it smaller. Everything is concentrated in me, even ourselves. Nobody is uncommon now, because nobody has time. But we have still to shake hands. Welcome back!" She held out her hand. "And, Peter, when did you get back? You used to run from garden parties and things. What in the world brought you here?"

He took the extended hand, holding it in his own. "A lucky chance," he said slowly. "That was all."

"Now," she said, "let me see what climate has done for you." She looked him up and down. "You're thinner, you know, and scorchier, but you're improved, Peter, decidedly improved."

He laughed. "You're a snicker in "I've told you, there's a better seat than this, surely. Shall we search?"
"But I've told you, there's a better seat
than this, surely. Shall we search?"
"But I've told you, there's a better seat
than this, surely. Shall we search?"

are gone. I brought a crenn scene.
Please say 'twill do."

Carstairs smiled. He knew the look in Joan's eyes. What he had yet to learn was the snarling with which she smiled.

"So good of you," she said. "But let me introduce you two. Charlie, this is Mr. Carstairs—quite my guest-friend."

Carstairs coughed. "Sorry, Joan," he said, abruptly, "but I think I must be off."

"O, Peter, how horrid of you!" She paused. "But you'll look me up. Come around to-morrow in the afternoon and I'll pay those debts." Her glance was warded him for many things. He took her hand.

"To-morrow, then. But remember, I've been buried alive, and one doesn't keep an address book in the grave," she said. "How stupid of me," she said. "You scribble while I say. Or, better still, I believe I've got a card.
Charlie, hold my cup."

It was after dinner when Carstairs took the card out of his pocket. Before he had been too absorbed to read the usual little stimulus of fact.

He turned the card and held it out to the lamp. He held it for a long time, moving not a muscle of his face or hand. Then, slowly, with a slowness that seemed almost overdone, he replaced it in his case.

He had his share of surprises in the world and his share of knocks, and he had taken them quietly, as beats a man. But now, in face of this new test, he was more than ordinarily still. Even his habit of speaking aloud for-wardly was still about his mouth. But when he was still about his mouth, he was not a muscle of his face or hand.

When Carstairs pressed the bell next day at the house in Baton Square—the grayness was still about his mouth. But when he was still about his mouth, he was not a muscle of his face or hand.

He passed upstairs and vaguely heard himself announced. Then Joan's voice crossed the silence, and everything else became subservient to that. It was his greeting of yesterday, but it came spontaneously. She looked up at his eyes and smiled.

"Yes, Peter; just the same Joan. Now I must give you my best chat, and you must talk."

Taking his hand, she drew him across the room.

He dropped into the seat and sat staring at a host of faces by his side.
All that he had meant to say seemed futile and absurd.

"Tea, Peter?"

She carried the fragile cup across to him and stood looking down at him.
"Peter," she said, "something has happened—I can feel it hanging about in the air."

Carstairs looked gloomily down at his boots.

"Peter, you never used to have secrets from me."

"Nor you from me." He took the cup from her hand. "You might have written and told me, don't you think?"

"That you were married?"

She stared.

"But it was so long ago—the first year you went away. I remember it is hard. You must have known."

Carstairs smiled grimly. "I remember that first year," he said, "and I went down with fever all the time and you forgot to write."

She moved back to her chair. "You're a little wrong, Peter—or forgetful," she blushed. "I did write when I did."

"Poor, little Joan!" he said, suddenly.
"Poor, little Joan!"

"O, afterwards," she broke a piece of cake. "Well, you see, I was a little straight across at him. 'You didn't write and Alice turned up—and that was all.'"

The words came in a whirl.
"There was silence while Carstairs attended events and their results. At last he laid down his cup."

"Of course," he said slowly, "you understand that I never got the letter. You gave me credit for that?"

"Yes, Peter," there was a quiver in her voice. "I give you credit for that."
There was silence. Then she spoke again.

"You know that I've always loved you," he said. "I took a dogged pleasure in watching the color rush across her face. Possibly it was the pleasure of despair."

"I don't think I understand," he said.
She watched him for a second; then she slipped close up to him and laid her fingers on his arm.

"Long ago, Peter," she said, softly,
"I was quite a child, and I was often angry. You often begged me off."

Carstairs attended himself.
"Well, Peter," her words caught.
"I was going to Alice with all my heart, and grateful, but—" Her fingers tightened. "But since he died—three months after we were married—I have prayed every day that I had reason to come back. I was on duty in the yard, where I saw one who used to take care of the children."

"Take care of the children? How could it be? What do you mean?"

"Well, he died, ma'am. It was wonderful what that elephant knew. The first time I made his acquaintance he gave me a blow that I had reason to remember. I was on duty in the yard, and the colonel's little child was playing about; and she kept running to me, I thought, to the elephant's feet. I was afraid he would put his great clumsy feet on her, by mistake. So I made up my mind to carry her to a safer place. I stooped to pick her up, and the next thing I knew I had had a

There are some persons who think it creditable or an evidence of merit when they tell us "I always say just what I think," casting forth their sayings right and left, just as they happen to feel, no matter where they strike or who they may wound. The truth is, that this boasted frankness is not honesty, but miserable impertinence and reckless cruelty. We have no right to say what we think unless we think kindly and lovingly; no right to unload our jeal-ousies, envies, bad humors, and miserable epistles upon the hearts of our neighbors. If we must be bad-tempered, we should at least keep our negligence locked up in our own breasts, and not let it out to wound the feelings and mar the happiness of others. If we must speak out our dislikes and prejudices and wretched feelings, let us go into our own room and lock the door and close the windows, so that no ear but our own shall hear the hateful words. If any man seemeth to be religious, or even morally decent, and brideeth not his tongue, that man's religion is vain, and his character is unprincipled and base. Therefore, beware of the persons who "always speak just what they think."

The United States Geological Survey has recently issued a reprint of a map of the United States whose convenient size recommends it for many uses. It is 11 by 16 inches, printed in blue and black; blue for the drainage and water features, and black for names and boundary lines. The principal cities, lakes and rivers, and the state lines, are the only features shown thereon, so that, free from confusing details, it forms an excellent base map for a variety of purposes. The map is of such size that it can quite readily be framed for reference, or used as a desk map under glass. It may be had for five cents on application to the Director of the United States Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

There is no safety in moderate drinking. The man who touches alcoholic drink at all is in danger. It does no good, and if persisted in it is almost sure to lead to destruction and death.

There are no official positions so high or so low but there are hundreds of persons competent to fill them.

The man who doesn't shovel the dirt is always willing to give advice.

In the battle of life, it is the gentleman who wins. Boys learn to be gentlemen in your manners.

Debt is nothing but a trap that we bait ourselves and then stupidly fall into.

A Valuable Medicine for Coughs and Colds in Children.

"I have not the slightest hesitancy in recommending Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to all who are suffering from coughs or colds," says Chas. M. Cramer, Esq., a well known watchmaker of Columbia, Caylon. "It has been some two years since the City Dispensary first called my attention to this valuable medicine, and I have repeatedly used it and have always been benefited. It has cured me quickly of all chest colds. It is especially effective for children, and seldom takes more than one bottle to cure them of bronchitis. I have procured many to try this valuable medicine, and they are all as well pleased as myself over the results." For sale by J. B. Rogers.
