Our World's Fair Letter.

CHICAGO, JULY 1, 1893.

"What do you think is the most interesting thing here?" is a question one often hears when friends meet after having spent a day or more at the great Fair. The answer generally is either the Fine Arts collection; or the vastness and splendor of the Fair itself taken as a whole with its general arrangement and its architecture, or the Manufactures and Liberal Arts building.

The Fine Arts Building is situated in the northern part of the Park, near 56th and 57th street entrance. It is one of the permanent buildings and is to remain at Jackson Park after the Fair is over. The dimensions of the main building are 320x500 feet; on either end is an annex 120x200 feet. This ambitious structure which is said to have escaped the assaults of even the hypercritical, was designed by Chas. B. Atwood, of New York, and cost $670,000.

Going in at either entrance of the main building, the visitor finds himself in one of the broad, cruciform shaped galleries. Where these galleries cross, the rotunda opens up to a splendid dome 125 feet high, on the top of which is a colossal winged figure of Victory.

The exhibits include sculpture, models and monumental decorations, bas reliefs in marble and bronze, paintings in oil and water colors, fresco painting, engraving and etching, prints and pastels, antique and modern carving, and many other select and valuable collections, such as have never been seen before. The hanging space is over 170,000 square feet. Of American artists, over 1,000 paintings are shown. It is not difficult to understand why the art student should spend a large portion of his time among the marvellous masterpieces here exhibited.

The magnificent system of lagoons adds very much to the attractiveness of the grounds. On their waters ply the Venetian gondolas propelled by native gondoliers, arrayed in holiday attire, dipping their oars in the glassy sea in measured time; the electric launches stealing noiselessly along like shadows o'er the land; also the steam launches that pass out through the inlet into the Lake, commanding a magnificent view of the grounds and buildings. The charge for these rides is 50 cents an hour, and no one coming to the Fair should fail to avail himself of the opportunity of seeing the Fair by moonlight.

It has often been said that a visit to the World's Fair is as good as a trip to Europe, or better than a year in college as an educator. Just how this is many people will not realize, for, no doubt, very many people will not take the pains to properly examine the exhibits. After passing through a building they will not be able to tell much of what they have seen, not having been particularly impressed by any thing. To illustrate: In the Transportation Building, for instance, is the B. & O. R. R. exhibit. The careless observer will pass through and see nothing but some old looking engines and a modern train, while in reality, as in other exhibits, we have here the progress made in the development of the steam engine, showing the different stages through which it has passed. Among these we see true models of the very first machines reaching back as far as 1680. Passing down one aisle and up the next we see some queer looking specimens, each one undoubtedly an improvement upon its predecessor, but nevertheless they seem all out of proportion and bring back to memory the youthful sport of still-walking. Passing down the aisle, each engine seems to approach a little nearer the ideal we expect to find. Here at the end of the line, is the Centennial engine, exhibited by this company at the Philadelphia Exposition in 1876. You will be surprised to see how much superior to this is the "Columbus," the most recent production of human thought and skill.

Just south of the Transportation

Building is the N. Y. Central R. R. exhibit. Here we find the old engine, the "Dewitt Clinton" and train of 1831, whose picture often adorns a page in the boys' History of the United States. The correctness of that picture is very strikingly brought out as we look upon these old relics themselves. Beyond this stands one of the grand "Exposition Flyers."

If the figures were at hand regarding the old Mexican ox-cart and Nancy Hanks' record breaking sulky, which are both on exhibition, some of the figures would stand in a reverse order. No less advance is shown here than in the other instance, however.

FRAZ'S OF NORTH DAKOTA.

Whenever an intelligent Dakotan hears of the Frazz Argos, all Dakotans are interested—get away from home he is surprised at the familiarity shown by strangers with the main facts in the State's history. He hears conversation about the Frazz Argos, and among his distant friends which show a degree of information concerning Dakota for which he is not prepared. Old peculiar political methods and archaisms and their unexpected outgrowth have assisted our wheat crop, our climate, and our magnificent cities in making the State famous, until strange observers in neighboring States can tell a Frazz Argos from a Frazz Argos. But one thing has always puzzled the best posted of strangers. That is our name. It is said a "rose by any other name would smell as sweet," but it would be hard to convince a denizen of the effects East that any Dakota product was genuine unless the "fickertail" was blown in the nostrils of the denizen. The Frazz Argos is a sucker, because he is. The Connecticut man is a nutcase. The Misourian is called a puke from the way he can talk. The Virginian is called a snipe from the way he can talk. The North Carolina is called a tarheel, because a soldier of that State when called a "tarheel" by a Virginia comrade, retorted: "Yes, we've got tar on our heels and that's why we stick in the fight, while you fellows run away." Oldbarns are called buckeyes on account of their nuts. Monobrowns are called gophers on account of their noses. More Dakotans are called fickertails is something entirely beyond the imagination of the uninitiated.

The name originated at the first of the Frazz Argos, by Representative Frank J. Thompson, of Fargo. The following is a full text of the resolution, which passed by a large majority. The joke was afterward expunged from the records of the house, but never expunged from the brains of Dakotans:

the pot of the Philadelphia, and was generally known as the "milk bird." Not only did he have free access to the streets of every city without hindrance into the treasure vaults, where even the Treasurer of the United States would not go alone, but he used his own pleasure in going about the city.

One notes, sometimes perching upon lamp posts, the streets of every city, the trains, and even the street boys, treated him with respect. The government provided his daily fare, and he was as much a part of the mint establishment as the Superintendent of the chief coiners. He was so kindly treated that he had no fear of anybody or anything, and he might be in the mint yet if he had not set down to rest on one of the great flywheels. The wheel started without warning, and Peter was caught in the machinery. One of his wings was broken, and he died a few days later. The Superintendent had his body beautifully mounted, with the wings spread to their fullest extent, and to this day Peter stands in a glass case in the mint's cabinet, where you may see him whenever you go there. An exact portrait of him as he stands in the case was put upon the coins named—Harp's Young People.

RAVE SISTERS AT SEA.

How the Daughters of a Merchant Captain met their end in the North Sea.

The British ship Hydrabad arrived recently at San Francisco from Swansea after a most eventful voyage of 272 days. Captain D. F. B. Scott has his two daughters with him, and both the young ladies assert that they never want to make a similar trip. This is the Hydrabad's maiden attempt, and Captain Scott is quoted by the Report as saying he hopes he will never have a similar experience while he remains skipper of her. After being launched and fitted out the Hydrabad was loaded with coal at Swansea and started for San Francisco. All went well until September 8, when the ship ran into a storm. The stanchions gave way, boats were smashed, the raily was washed overboard, the cabin was flooded, and finally the cargo shifted. While the ship was lying on her beam ends the foremast and mainmast went by the board, and it looked as though the ship was doomed. It was regular Cape Horn weather, and the men were almost dead from cold. In spite of the fact that death was imminent the captain's daughters were not dismayed. They made coffee over the coal oil stove in the cabin and served it to the half-frozen men whenever an opportunity occurred. They asserted that many times the young women made their way forward, and hence were all awash. The gale lasted nearly a week, and then contrary winds were blowing. Captain Scott about to give up in despair and start for San Francisco via the Cape of Good Hope, when on October 12 it came on to blow again. All the important gear was blown away and almost an entire suit of sails was lost. The weight of water that came thundering on board bent the deck beams and the vessel began to leak. The cargo shifted again and everybody prepared for the worst. A conference of the officers was held in the cabin and it was decided to make for the Falkland Islands. The men were exhausted by this time and refused to work. Many of them were sick and did not care whether they lived or died. The captain's daughters went among them, and bound up their wounds and with steaming hot coffee, into which the captain put a little of the old time medicine, they were able to get them to return to duty. Five days later Port Stanley was reached and the ship was repaired. It took 100 days to repair the ship and they another start was made.

She Must Go.

It is said that the bridesmaid, that additional representative of youth and beauty, is in danger of disappearing from the scene as has so long graced. It is urged against her that she is an expensive luxury. It would not be so bad if she served any really useful purpose. But her office, unlike that of the old time bridesmaid, is practically a sinecure. The duties are as nominal as the responsibilities are imaginary, and it is probably within the mark to say that on the wedding day she enjoys herself better than any other woman there. In France it is said that a new profession has sprung up in connection with weddings, whereby certain needy individuals are enabled to hire themselves out as "givers away" of brides who are marrying without parental consent. In regard to bridesmaids, there might be something of the same kind. In any case, the bridesmaid would certainly weigh less heavily on the bridegroom than the present tax. "Select something nice for yourself! It is a dangerous thing to say to a party of bridesmaids when you are arranging about the wedding. There are cases where a man can get somewhat too agreeable for the good of his pocket. Sentiment has a poor showing when pitted against sense and hard cash, and the brilliant idea of bridesmaids, looking each like a Flora with her superb bouquet, will soon be numbered with the things that were.

WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE?
Between the Compound Oxygen Treatment of Diseases and that by the use of Drugs? It is an important one.
Drugs are taken into the stomach. For this reason their action is not direct.
Compound Oxygen is taken into the lungs, and, therefore, comes immediately into contact with and is absorbed into the blood.
Drugs, being generally
poisons, act by causing a disturbance in the body.
Compound Oxygen, being composed of the elements
of the air, and acting upon the blood, is not open to this objection.
But, however it may act,
it has certainly cured many
cases of chronic disease,
in which drugs have failed.
This is the point
of greatest interest to all chronic sufferers. To all such we say:
Send for our book of 200
pages, sent free. Read for yourselves what Compound Oxygen is, how it acts, and, above all, what it has accomplished.

New Jersey has ample reason to be proud of her public educational exhibit at the World's Fair. The New Jersey exhibit occupies 1,400 square feet of the Exposition floor, but by an arrangement of cases this space is amplified to about 20,000 square feet. The exhibit is so systematized and simplified in its arrangement that any particular piece of work can be readily found and examined. Educators from other States, especially the West, are taking great interest in the New Jersey section of the educational exposition, and are making notes of our State display for utilization in their own provinces of work. Jersey men who have visited the Fair are enthusiastic over the exhibit.

The outflow of gold has ceased, and the tide has turned toward us, as is shown by a late New York order for $500,000 in gold from London. Should this turn of the tide be lasting, we can be glad, and can well afford to admit our mistake. If the stress on our banks, the curtailing of business enterprises and the tendency to decrease of labor and wages also pass away we can well afford even to be called false prophets in the light of prosperity. For all this we wait, and so long as no signs of its coming are visible, we wait.

Secretary Carlisle used his discretionary right and on Monday informed the principal firms that offer silver to the Treasury that he would not make any purchases.
