Voters Adopt But One Proposition.

Friday, 11.00 p.m. At the special School Meeting, held this evening, the first proposition—to add four rooms between High School and Annex—was carried by a vote of 105 to 24. The second—to build a new High School—was defeated by 18, the ballot showing 51 yes, and 69 no. The sentiment seemed to be that the Board should first call a public meeting for a general discussion of the matter.

The friends of the Needlework Guild will be interested to know that in addition to its regular activities, the Hammontont Branch is cooperating with the national organization by undertaking the support of an orphan at St. Quentin, France, for the year, the money being contributed by the directors of the Branch. The National Society did wonderful work for St. Quentin during the war.

At a largely attended meeting of the Burlington and Atlantic County members of the New Jersey Poultry Producers Association, held in Mays Landing Wednesday evening, July 20th, H. O. Packard, of Hammontont, was unanimously elected their director to serve for one year. According to the signed-up stock, this state-wide Association will do a business in excess of one million and a half this first year.

The primary department of the M. E. Sunday School had a very enjoyable time at their annual picnic, held in Kind's Grove, Thursday afternoon. There were 31 children and 3 teachers present. They were transported by Gardner's truck. Games were indulged in, and they also took part in numerous races. The funniest race was the sack race, even the smallest toddlers took part in the races and won prizes. They enjoyed a lunch in the middle of the afternoon, and before returning home at 6.30, ice cream was served. They all had a jolly good time and no accidents occurred.

July Sixteenth.

Saturday last, known and celebrated as the birthday of "Our Lady of Mount Carmel," was attended by an immense crowd, both on the street and in the parade. Masses were held at St. Joseph's Church during the morning hours.

Two bands favored the people with concerts as they covered the main streets at intervals during the day. The parade, in the afternoon, was one not soon to be forgotten. The offerings of money were very large.

The fireworks, at nine o'clock, were excellent, the set pieces beautiful, and bombs ear-splitting. As all will acknowledge, the day was a success. As always happens, there were those present who were after easy money; and several pocket books, watches, autos, and other articles stolen.

It is a notable fact in the history of all social progress that customs change slowly; that much persuasion and much teaching are necessary before reforms clearly for the benefit of all are accepted. Habit is psychological and physical. Whatever has become habit is easier than anything new.

The undertaking profession may be considered as just beginning. The service which it renders is a protection to the community, and, once known, commends itself. But many do not know its value.

"The problem of the American funeral director," says Dr. Oscar Dowling, President of the Louisiana State Board of Health. "is the one which all pioneers have met from time immemorial. He must show cause for his enterprise in such terms as will convince those who are open-minded to change, and those also who are wedded to the customs of the past. The best way to do this is to give good service. The advantages to be derived, the comfort and satisfaction which result, the protection afforded, cannot be overestimated."

SATURDAY, JULY 23, 1921

No, we do not believe that the Mosquito Commission were at fault, nor do we accuse any of our residents of conducting or allowing a hatchery on their premises; but on Tuesday and Wednesday nights we were literally eaten alive. They appeared to be very small, fiery little devils, and climbed through nettings with ease. And their sting! Gee! How it made the kiddies squirm. But the wind changed, and some other towns were favored by their visit.

The carnival, or at least most of the stands, has gone, leaving the merry-go-round, lunch counter, and one or two of the games of chance. Altho' the gambling wheels were well patronized, no one denies the fact that they are positively gambling devices, and should not have been allowed to operate.

It would fill a page were we to publish the remarks, pro and con, which we heard regarding last night's school meeting. We regret that we had so short a time to consider it; but the result would probably be the same.

We re-publish, this week, the prize article written by Kermit Kipp. The author's name was omitted last week thro' an oversight. Next week we shall publish the second article, and follow with the third. They are certainly worthy of careful reading.

In their efforts to clarify the state laws, they have made many of them as "clear as mud." It used to be that an ordinary intelligent man could correctly interpret the legal phrases; but now, even the lawyers differ over their meaning. No wonder things are in a muddle.

The special school meeting held last evening, happened too late for this week's issue; and for that reason we have inserted a "fudge" on first page. We may enlarge on the account next week.

New Jersey Republicans. State Republican Chairman E. C. Stokes said today that the appeal to ten thousand Republicans to finance the State Committee with dollar subscriptions had netted the State Committee to July 1st just $455. This sum, the State Chairman said, indicated that forty-one and one half per cent of the people addressed gladly responded to the appeal for popular support of the Party. "I am delighted at the success for the effort this year," said Governor Stokes. "When fully forty-one persons out of each hundred respond eagerly and willing with a dollar each it shows conclusively that they want to participate in party affairs. I am confident that some good Republicans have laid aside this appeal intending to send in their dollar before we close the books on September first. We are still receiving dollars daily. I hope to report fifty per cent paid in when the State Committee meet next month. The success of the year means that we will easily expand the appeal next year, and we hope to finance the whole campaign for the State Committee with dollar bills."

He felt singularly wide-awake, and, after a while, he gave up attempting to go to sleep. The new development which had come to light that evening was uppermost in his thoughts; and, as he lay there, covered only with a sheet, for the time being, the whole of his scheme unfolded itself before his imagination. The American was right in his belief that it was he who had no doubt; and in his mind's eye he saw the great crowds of little, toothless men and a few black-headed visayanos and paid blackbirds of the no-called Utopia. Starvation, misery, ruin, utter and complete nakedness in his mental picture; specters disguised as great ideals, but clinging carnivorously under their masks. And once again he seemed to hear the tale of machines, guns, as he had heard them night after night during the years gone by. But this time there were mounted on the pavement of the towns of England, and the wail of the bullets which had swept like a torrent of coals over the white sand-land, now whistled down the streets between rows of square houses.

And once again a spangled path lead him to a garden of Eden. He was dressed in a white tunic, and he was beginning to regret that he had followed the earnest advice of the American to sleep with his windows shut and bolted. What on earth could Petersen do to him in a room at the Brix? But he had promised the detective, and there it was—curtains drawn, window bolted, door locked. Moreover, and he smiled grimly at himself as he remembered it, he had even gone so far as to simulate the hysterical maiden lady of fiction and pore under the bed.

The next moment the hall ceased abruptly, and he lay rigid, with every nerve alert. Something had moved in the room.

It had only been a tiny movement, more like the sudden crack of a piece of furniture than anything else—but it was not quite like it. At this point, a stifling sound had proceeded the crack; the sound such as a man would make when he steps on a slipper against a noise, was moving in a dark room; a stealthy, unsteady noise. Hugh Petersen, who was sitting tensely, after the first moment of surprise his brain was quite cool. He had looked under the bed, he had looked in his coat in the cupboard, and he had for those two obvious places there was no cover for a cat. And yet, with the sort of sixth sense that four years of war had given him, he knew that noise had been made by some human agency. Human? He thought of the cobra at the Elme flashed into his mind, and his mouth set more grimly. What if Petersen had introduced some of his amphibious creatures into the room? Then, once more, the thing like a typhoon leapt in his ear, and, with it his imagination, he had heard a faint sibilant hiss just before.

Suddenly it struck him that he was at a terrible disadvantage. The thing, whatever it was, knew, at any rate approximately, his position; he had not the slightest notion where it was. And a blind man holding a man who could see, would have felt just about as safe with Hugh, such a conclusion meant instant action. It might be dangerous on the floor; it most certainly was far more so in his bed. He got up, switched on the light, and, with one conclusive bound, he was standing by the door, with his hand on the electric-light switch.

"If it's All the Same to You, I Wish You'd Remove Him,"

"Then he panted and listened intently. Not a sound could be heard; the thing, whatever it was, had become motionless at the sudden movement. For an appreciable time he stood there, his eyes searching the darkness; but even he could see nothing, and he cursed the American comprehensively under his breath. He would have given anything for even the faintest glow of light, so that he could have some idea of what it was and where it was. Now he felt utterly blind, while every moment he imagined some noise crawling truthfully on his bare feet—creeping up on him.

"The light flashed out, darting round the room. Phew! Something had hit the stove of his position, but still he could see nothing. The bed, with the clothes thrown back, the washstand, the chair with his trousers and shirt everything was as it had been when he turned it. And then he heard a scuff and a sound—distinct and clear. It came from Hugh, near the ceiling, and he heard the beam of the big lamp and the traveled up. It reached the top, and he saw there, first and steady, framed in the middle of it, peering over the edge, was a little hunched, brown face, holding what looked like a tube to his mouth. Hugh had one glimpse of a dark, slithering hand putting something in the tube, and then he switched off the torch and ducked. It was as another fly plucked over his head and hit the wall behind.

One thing at any rate, was certain: the other occupant of the room was human, and with that realization all the nerves rattled. Hugh Petersen would have enough to do to find out how he got there, and what those strange playing snakes had been caused by. Just at that moment only one thing was on his mind: to get out of the room as quickly as he could.

It was standing on a patch of two from the wall, and he slipped his feet but he did not slip. He was standing on a patch of two from the wall, and he slipped his feet but he did not slip.

He was leaning over the side of the boat reading a telegram when he felt his hand touch the water. He was sitting on the edge of the boat, and he felt his hand touch the water.

"This is a pleasant surprise," he remarked slyly. "Have you been to Paris, too?"

"Walk right in, Mr. Green," said Hugh, and, three hours later, they got out of a taxi in Half Moon street.

"At twelve o'clock today," they rang out, "you will find a letter in your hand which will tell you that your

"What's the trouble, captain?" he asked as he joined the group.

A friend of the management elected to spend the night on the top of my cupboard, Mr. Green," answered Drummond, "and got drunk half-way through."

"He told me," said Hugh, "that he had a very nice evening, but I don't think he was quite so happy as he seems to be."

"He was not ill," said Hugh, "but he was not quite so happy as he seems to be."

"He was not ill," said Hugh, "but he was not quite so happy as he seems to be."

"He was not ill," said Hugh, "but he was not quite so happy as he seems to be."

"He was not ill," said Hugh, "but he was not quite so happy as he seems to be."

"He was not ill," said Hugh, "but he was not quite so happy as he seems to be."

"He was not ill," said Hugh, "but he was not quite so happy as he seems to be."

It was short and to the point, but he read it three times before he slept.

"What did this come?" he asked. "It was not a letter, was it?"

"It was not a letter, was it?" he asked. "It was not a letter, was it?"

"It was not a letter, was it?" he asked. "It was not a letter, was it?"

"It was not a letter, was it?" he asked. "It was not a letter, was it?"

"It was not a letter, was it?" he asked. "It was not a letter, was it?"

"It was not a letter, was it?" he asked. "It was not a letter, was it?"

"It was not a letter, was it?" he asked. "It was not a letter, was it?"

FARMER'S WIFE NEARLY STARVED

Mrs. Peterson Says She Was Afraid to Eat on Account of Trouble That Followed.

"I weighed just a hundred and three pounds when I began taking 'Tunic,' but now I weigh a hundred and twenty-two pounds," declared Mrs. Amy Peterson, the wife of a prosperous farmer of Lakewood, Mass., a suburb of New Bedford.

"I had acute indigestion," she said, "and to one knows how I suffered. I had cramping pains in my stomach that were almost unbearable, and I suffered also with great loss of sleep and bleeding. Why, I was actually starving to keep from being in such a bad way. I had lost all my weight, and I was just a skeleton."

"But now I feel as strong and well as if I had never been sick a day in my life," she said. "I have gained back all my weight, and I feel that I am getting on my feet."

"We all demand the truth; unless it is annoying."
