KENTUCKY ELECTION.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Aug. 7, 1871.
The election in Louisville thus far shows heavy republican gains.

In Frankfort there has been 590 and Harlan 690.
A report of the election in Danville up to noon gives Leslie 383 and Harlan 582. For Representative—Haskins, democrat, 393; Barkley, radical, 558.
The returns generally show republican gains. The republicans concede Leslie's election by about 20,000, democratic majority in the State. It is variously estimated here at from 20,000 to 30,000, which is a falling off from the Grant-Seymour election of 26,000 to 26,000, and 40,000 to 50,000 from the last gubernatorial election. All the democratic candidates for the Legislature are elected.

KENTUCKY RIOT.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Aug. 8.—A riot commenced here last evening after the closing of the polls. A short scuffle arose among several negroes, and two shots were fired. The police interfered, but were driven back, seventy or eighty shots being fired, and large stones and boulders &c. Two white men—Mr. Wm. Gilmore and Mr. Whitman—were instantly killed, and three or four other white men wounded, but none killed. A crowd of negroes paraded the streets after the shooting. The State troops were ordered out, and are still under arms. The Federal troops were not called out. Towards midnight, there was considerable excitement in the city. Young Mr. Gilmore, who was killed during the disturbance, was a master mason, and was extremely popular in the city. The leader of the negro rioters was captured. He has received several severe though not fatal wounds.

REMOVAL OF GEN. PLEASANTON.

WASHINGTON, August 8.
Last night, Gen. Porter, by direction of the President, called upon Gen. Pleasanton, with a verbal message, requesting him to resign his office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue. This General Pleasanton declined to do, and on the President's being informed of this declaration, he resolved to suspend General Pleasanton and appoint J. M. Douglas First Assistant Commissioner in his place. The President has just signed the warrant and forwarded it to Secretary Boutwell, authorizing him to suspend General Pleasanton from office. This will be done this afternoon. Deputy Commissioner Douglas will fill the place till Congress meets.

PARIS COURT MARTIAL.

PARIS, August 8.
The Third Council of War convened this forenoon for the trial of the Communists prisoners. Eighteen of the leaders of the Rebellion were first arraigned before the Council, and the indictments, specifying the various charges preferred against them, were read.

Among the prisoners were Mons. Ferri and Agel (the latter being the late Secretary of the Workmen's International Society, in Paris). These two were a default, insolent air, which was in marked contrast with the submissive and almost dejected appearance of Mons. Courbet and Groussot, their fellow prisoners. Gen. Rossel, probably the most daring and brilliant leader of the Communists, was among the number, but his protracted imprisonment, and the repeated efforts of his friends to secure his pardon and liberation, always ending in failure, had rendered him spiritless, and he appeared resigned to his fate.

A good deal of excitement has been created here over the opening of the trial, every feature of which will doubtless be watched with increasing interest.

WORCESTER, July 29th, 1871.

Mr. Editor:—The prolonged "burst of silence" with which I have treated your self and readers, is mainly due to the fact that I have been rustling for several weeks, and in the meantime ignored pen, paper and all brain work not actually demanded by the daily needs of every day life. Mothers here in this goodly city seem to have gone along in the same old track of progress and improvement during my absence, of which last I am reminded as I move among the busy streets, as well as the more quiet avenues, where splendid mansions and smooth kept lawns, with their carefully trained shrubbery and luxuriant flowers bespeak the wealth and taste of their occupants.

Worcester is in a delightful condition of health, and bids fair to be as good as new in years to come, at least. The new building of the first hall of the city are giving place to larger and more imposing structures of brick, granite and marble, suited to the increasing demands of business in all its various departments and the general of men are only employed in the fine arts, poetry, arts and making such other public improvements as may be deemed necessary. Church architecture has been at a rather low figure here in the past, but there has been a marked improvement in this respect within the last two years, as five hundred thousand dollars have been expended in the building and repairing of the houses of worship belonging to the different religious societies. Whether these investments have been in all instances judicious and laudable, is a question which is not likely to receive a unanimous answer just at present.

The Fire Alarm Telegraph engaged by the city authorities last spring, is now in successful operation, and by a singular coincidence, fires have been much more frequent since its establishment than formerly; yet with all the public spirit manifested by these improvements our city government has shown itself to be "penny wise and pound foolish," in letting the last opportunity of securing a park in a central location, upon favorable terms, to slip from their hands because a portion of the tax payers objected to an increase of the city debt. When our fast increasing population shall have driven us into closer quarters and more crowded streets, we shall find deeper cause to regret this short-sighted policy.

Just now, even in the dog days, when we are in the midst of the annual exodus to the sea shore and mountains, comes the announcement of the peace jubilee whose projected magnificence seems destined to throw into the shade of oblivion, that of 1869, whose success was sufficient to elevate Boston in general, and Gilmore in particular, to the seventh heaven of self-glorification. But we shall see what we shall see.

CHOLERA AGAIN.

For two years past the cholera has been lingering in Russia, where it has become domiciliated as a winter disease. In the United States it manifests all the peculiarities of a tropical plague and dies with the frosts of autumn, but in Russia, probably owing to the filth of the cities, and the "crowd poison" to which they submit in order to keep warm, it is often as fatal in January as July. The last news by cable is that with the warm weather it has assumed a more virulent form, has reached the Baltic ports and has crossed the Russian frontier into Prussian Poland, in spite of a rigorous sanitary cordon. Once in North Germany, its route to England is easy, and the incidents of 1865 may be expected to recur. At that time, as now, a line of steamships crossed the North German ocean and landed their cargoes of emigrants at Hull, whence they were taken by rail to Liverpool, and then by steamer again to New York. The contagion, for it is no longer doubted that cholera is contagious, was thus conveyed from Russia to the North German ports, Hull and Liverpool both suffered notable epidemics, and the final depot was New York Harbor. Cholera has already made its appearance at Hull, Liverpool will come next, and it is leaving too much on Providence to suppose that New York will entirely escape—and New York means the country.

This was precisely the course of the disease in 1865. The first invasion known to this country came by a different route. Russia was then almost as isolated as China, and suffered but little. The destroyer took the line of the Mediterranean, spread north through Europe, reached England and then came to America via Quebec, which was then the principal entrepot for immigration to this country. Montreal, Albany and New York were successively attacked, and from New York as from a common focus, it spread all over the land, but always following the routes of travel. There was a deal of fantastic talk at the time about its being a scourge of God, a national punishment for national sins, etc., and the general doctrine taught, was that it was not contagious but "in the air." But why the poisoned air followed steamboat, stage and canal lines—railroads hardly existed then—was never explained, and we were left to the conclusion that all the sinners destined to capital punishment lived on the main lines of travel, and the good people lived on farms or in distant rural villages. The fact was that the cholera was an imported article and an exotic at that. As soon as medical men faced the subject and shook off all petty detail derived from narrow personal experience, and looked at the march of the epidemic along all great thoroughfares from Mecca via Marseille, and Quebec to Chicago, they bravely called it contagious, and worked for prevention rather than for cure. It was not enough for a doctor to say that he himself had been exposed a hundred or a thousand times and never felt a symptom. A well-led, cleanly gentleman, going about with a mind doing good, may face almost any contagion in safety.

All this was admirably proved in England in 1865. Accepting the contagion theory, the medical authorities—voiced there with almost despotic power in such emergencies—"stamped out" the epidemic. They isolated the patient, they purified the room he occupied, and they burned his bed clothing. If he died, he did not leave another legacy of death behind him, and it was found possible to quench each case as it came, instead of leaving it as a focus for other cases. Just at that time, the New York Metropolitan Board of Health secured an efficient organization and simple municipal power. So energetically and sharply did they manage their work, that they were laughed at because there was no epidemic at large in the city and were accused of eliminating far more than they performed. But as a fact of which we speak with some knowledge, some of the cholera cases which were sent of cases filled the hospital barracks when standing on the Battery, and the drains of the city itself had been picked off all along the front of Mont and Mulberry streets. The epidemic was "stamped out" by disinfection, the isolation of the patients, and a great horror was averted.

This experience, with the same result obtained in England, satisfies us that while we may have cholera, we need have no cholera panic. So far as the spread of the disease is concerned, it is controllable, and the same mind and energy employed in 1865 will bind it again within very narrow limits. There is small reason to hope for specifics or cures. A blood poison, which often works its way up to a fatal power in two hours cannot be met by a dose which, under far better chances, would require six hours to produce its effect. The remedy is in prevention, and the theory we have attempted to roughly illustrate is now so well established among leading medical minds that we are sure it will be applied again to prove that cholera is an exotic of barbarian origin and cannot compete with the forces of civilization.
