Peach Yellows.

This is a subject upon which there is a vast difference in the views of peach growers. Some consider it little more than a myth, and think it the result of starvation; others think it is a fungoid disease, that can be cured by the application of potash or lime; and others stoutly assert that digging out and burning all affected trees, and those immediately adjacent, is the only remedy. That it is a fungoid disease I believe I have abundant evidence, and in common with some of our experienced peach men in this state and Connecticut, I believe it curable. The American Fruit Culturist gives as infallible indications of Yellows. "Premature ripening of the fruit some weeks in advance of the usual season, with purple discolorations of the flesh, and the following season often followed by the growth of numerous small, wiry shoots from the main branches; the whole tree assumes a yellow, sickly appearance, and eventually dies. I may add, that freestone peaches, when thus prematurely ripened, cling, and small white lines (the roots of the fungus) may be found along the roots of the trees. A very large portion of all the peaches offered in Philadelphia markets in the early part of August, this year exhibited this purple discoloration. I learn of quite a number of cases of undoubted yellows in orchards in this state; and when we consider the fact that it is extremely contagious, it will be seen that it is vastly important that it should be checked and stamped out if possible. In a recent trip to Little Silver, I saw a large peach tree which was now in a perfectly healthy condition, and bore a full crop of fine fruit last year and some this year, which was pronounced by competent judges to have the yellows some four or five years ago. This tree stood close by a steam engine, and the ashes were thrown under it in a large pile. Another case shown by Mr. T. Greineck, the able editor of Orchard and Garden, was more recent. One of his neighbors had two trees which exhibited symptoms of the disease, and in July last Mr. G. advised the application of two quarts muriate of potash to each tree, which was dug in under the branches, and the trees have resumed their healthy growth. We have numerous instances of the improvement of health and vigorous growth of peach trees by heavy applications of wood ashes, and such applications undoubtedly pay on perfectly healthy trees. I would advise all those who have gone into the business to make annual applications of wood ashes or muriate of potash, and in pretty large quantities. A little ground bone or nitrate of soda will be beneficial.

W. F. BASSETT.

The yellow fever is spreading rapidly in Florida, and a number of cases are reported in neighboring states.

Never before in the history of Missouri have the Republicans been so active and enthusiastic as they are in the present campaign. Large and effective meetings are being held every day.

Bishop Newman, of the M.E. Church, says:

"The supreme duty is to place the control of our government in the hands of Harrison and Morton. I vote as I pray, and pray as I vote."

Bishop Joyce says, on the same line of reasoning:

"I shall vote for Harrison & Morton. I am a thorough non-partisan prohibitionist. The Methodist discipline on temperance is a non-partisan prohibition utterance."

A St. Louis judge has refused to naturalize a Chinaman, and holds that none but pure whites and negroes are eligible.

Well informed Republicans in West Virginia are confident of carrying that state for Harrison and Morton.

A resident of Nottinghamshire, England, wrote to his brother in this country that English workmen are contributing money to be sent to America to aid in bringing about Free Trade here.

A NEW LINER.
An Experiment in the Navigation of the Seas.

For a long time the maritime world has been looking forward to the first trip of the magnificent new Atlantic steamer, City of New York. The advent of a new liner is always a matter of interest, but in this case the interest was exceptionally strong.

Why is this? Because the New York is built upon new plans, and it is expected to quite revolutionize the navigation of the ocean. And it seems likely that the anticipation of her projectors will be fully realized. On her trial trip she made eighteen knots an hour, with engines running at three-quarters speed, and at short intervals took through the water at the rate of twenty-three knots an hour—a tremendous speed for a vessel of her size.

The most important feature of the City of New York is a landsman, is her size. She is the largest vessel ever built for passenger traffic, except the ill-fated Great Eastern, her gross register being fully 2,000 tons greater than that of any vessel now plying between the continents. Her length over all is 580 feet, breadth 63 1/2, and her depth, from the top of the upper deck cabin to the bottom of the keel, 59 1/2 feet. Her gross tonnage is 10,500, and her engines were built to supply a horse-power of 16,000.

To the seaman her most important peculiarity consists in the fact that she is furnished with twin screws and double sets of engines. This is a bold experiment to make on so grand a scale. It is true that twin screws have been used on smaller vessels with gratifying success—notably in the case of the new steamer lately put in harbor service between Pier 8, New York City, and Sandy Hook. But when it was decided to adapt the twin-screw principle to large ocean-going craft, there were not lacking plenty of people who declared that with so large a ship the screws would neutralize each other. They would produce an unpleasant motion, etc.

Another important feature of the City of New York is the fact that in her construction the watertight bulkhead principle has been carried to the last conclusion. There are eighteen of these bulkheads, and they separate the ship absolutely into as many different compartments, there being no doors or passages of any kind between the compartments below the level of the upper deck. It will be remembered that the sinking of the Oregon, the big Cunard steamer that foundered off the Atlantic coast a few years ago, was caused by the fact that the door in one of the bulkheads was open, and owing to an accumulation of coal dust in the ways could not be closed in time to prevent the whole steamer filling shortly after the leak following the collision.

Besides the twin screws and the eighteen perfect bulkheads, the City of New York has a double bottom and five decks, each deck containing 27,000 square feet. She can accommodate over 2,000 persons. Quarters for first class passengers are furnished amidships, second class passengers between the center and the stern, and immigrants in the stern and bow. The ship throughout is lighted by electricity, over 1,000 lamps being employed, and is furnished in a style of magnificence never even approached heretofore on board ship. Finally, she will be of exceptionally light draft, notwithstanding her great size, and will have unusual rudder power. It will therefore now be necessary for her to lie outside the harbors of New York or Liverpool in order to "get over the bar," and she can be handled much better while in port than any other steamer afloat.

The steamer City of Paris, which is rapidly nearing completion for the Inman line, will be a sister ship to the City of New York, and will be built upon the same plan.

A Strange Friendship.

Mrs. Fenton, of North Bergen, N. J., is alleged to be the possessor of a white cat with a living necklace. The necklace is a slender black snake, about two feet long, its dark color showing in marked contrast to the cat's white coat. About a month ago the cat went bounding into the breakfast room, hissing and spitting in a paroxysm of terror. Her alarm was quickly shared by the Fenton family, who were at the table, when they ascertained that she was half strangled by a snake that had coiled itself around her neck. She seemed unable to help herself either with teeth or claws, and her friends undertook to assist her with sticks and umbrellas. They chased her around the room, whacking away vigorously at her, missing the snake, but hitting the cat every time, until puffy, not approving of this mode of deliverance, sprang wildly out of the open window, and ran away.

The Chinese Dog-Skin Industry.

The rearing of dogs for their skins is pursued in China just as sheep farming is in Australia. There are thousands of small dog and goat farms scattered over the northern districts of Manchuria and Mongolia. Nature has provided a magnificent protection to withstand the cold of these northern latitudes, where the thermometer (Fahrenheit) goes down to 25, below zero—that is, 57° of frost—and it is doubtful if the dog skins of any other part of the world are to be compared with those that come from Manchuria or Mongolia, either in size, length of hair or quality. The fur is at its best during the winter, and the dog is killed before the thaw sets in, which is effected, not by the knife, which might injure the fur, but by strangulation. Last year the value of the skins fell off owing to the stocks of previous years being undelivered. It is difficult to understand how the farmers can rear the animals for the price they obtain for the hides. To provide a well-made dog-skin rug at least eight animals must be slaughtered, which at three tracts per rug of eighty inches by sixty-three inches would allow not quite fifty-five cents per dog, including the sewing, clothing, etc., for the skins must first be tanned. The flesh, however, is no doubt used for human food, the market value thereof entering largely into the farmer's profit and loss account. When a girl is married she receives perhaps six dogs as her dowry.

The Law of Happiness.

Work is not only the normal condition of human existence, but it is the law of happiness; for although there are shades and strains of happiness that come to us by receptivity simply, yet, taking man comprehensively, and human life at large, man is happy in the proportion in which he is accomplishing by the developing of his own powers. It is what a man does more than what he is receiving that makes him happy. It is the evolution of mind forces, in connection with the body, addressed to worthy objects, and attaining them. It is the sense of life in activity; it is the sense of God in man in the lower sphere, creating, or preparing to create—it is this that is the secret of happiness. The idea of most men is that happiness is ecstasy; but ecstasy is paroxysmal and unwholesome. That happiness which is the most wholesome and best for us is of a low measure, and this happiness is nowhere else so well obtained as where a man has rightly adjusted labor, and that day by day. Nor can we conceive how any man, unless he be laid aside by an ordinance of Providence from direct labor, can be happy, with the self-respect, with a sense of his dignity as a spiritual being, and with a sense of his responsibility as a co-worker with God, if he be not an industrious man and an accomplice, or if he seeks happiness in idleness.

Afghan Traits.

Dadai, or revenge, is the soul of Afghan life. All the history of Afghanistan, both public and private, is one continued tale of vendetta. However, it changes that I have not in my collection any song of vendetta illustrating this side of Afghan life in a manner sufficiently characteristic to deserve quotation. Suffice it to say, that vendetta is with the Afghans what it is with the Corsicans, the Albanians, all primitive mountaineers; it is hereditary and not to be prescribed. Even on British territory the law is powerless against the badai; it is one of the crimes for which no witness will be found to speak before the Judge in bachchi. There is hardly an Afghan in the mountain who has not a foe who aims at his head and at whose head he aims. It happens not seldom that an Afghan sepooy from Yaghtistan—many Afghans from over the border enlist in the native contingent—asks for leave for private business; that means that there is up there some wolf's head which he has to take. There is a story of an Afghan sepooy, who, having not joined his patlan in due time, complained bitterly of the iniquity of his officer, who had dismissed him from service: "I had a duty of badai to perform; I had a foe to kill. The sepooy absconded for weeks, what could I do?"

For three days Mrs. Fenton mourned for her cat as for one dead. Then her pet returned, still wearing the reptile necklet. She was tranquil now, however, and seemed to like the situation, resisting every effort to remove the serpent. A saucer of milk was placed before her, and as she lapped it up the snake uncoiled part of its body, lowered its head into the saucer, and the two drank amicably together. This singular friendship has continued. The creatures are almost inseparable. When the snake occasionally uncovers to stretch itself the cat grows very uneasy. They feed together, and when the snake eats too fast the cat pushes its head to one side. The snake signifies its disapproval of unseemly voracity on the part of the cat in the same manner.

LESSON ANALYSIS.

I. THE LEADER'S OUTLOOK.
L. The Exalted Standpoint: Moses went up... to the top of Pisgah (1). He took up... to the top of Pisgah (Num. 23: 14). Get thee up into this mountain of Abram (Num. 27: 12). Get thee up into the top of Pisgah (Deut. 3: 27). Get thee up... unto Mount Nebo (Deut. 32: 49).
II. The Broad View: And the Lord showed him all the land (2). All the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it (Gen. 13: 15). Lift up thine eyes, and behold (Deut. 3: 27). Behold the land of Canaan (Deut. 32: 49). Thine eyes... shall behold a far stretching land (Isa. 33: 17).

III. The Appointed Privation: Thou shalt not go over thither (4). Ye shall not bring this assembly into the land (Num. 20: 12). Thou shalt not go over this Jordan (Deut. 3: 27). It went ill with Moses for their sake (Isa. 106: 32). They were not able to enter in because of unbelief (Heb. 3: 19). "Moses went up..." (1) From the plains of Moab; (2) To the heights of Pisgah; (3) For the survey of Canaan; (4) For the ascent to God.

II. THE LEADER'S REMOVAL.
I. Death: So Moses the servant of the Lord died (5). Behold, thy days approach that thou must die (Deut. 31: 14). Die in the mount whither thou goest up (Deut. 32: 50). Moses was an hundred and twenty years old when he died (Deut. 34: 7). Moses my servant is dead (Josh. 1: 2).
II. Burial: And he buried him in the valley (6). Thou shalt be buried in a good old age (Gen. 15: 15). I will bury my dead there (Gen. 23: 13). No man knoweth of his sepulchre (Deut. 34: 6). He disputed about the body of Moses (Jud. 9).

III. Lamentation. And the children of Israel wept for Moses (8). The Egyptians wept for him threescore and ten days (Gen. 50: 3). They lamented with a very great and sore lamentation (Gen. 50: 10). They wept for Aaron thirty days (Num. 20: 29). Devout men buried Stephen, and made great lamentation (Acts 8: 2).
1. "Moses the servant of the Lord died there." (1) The honored servant; (2) The designated leader; (3) The illustrious dead; (4) The funeral cortege; (5) The burial rites; (6) The unknown sepulchre.
2. "The children of Israel wept for Moses." (1) A nation in tears; (2) A nation in grief.

III. THE LEADER'S EULOGY.
I. Heir to Men: Full of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him (9). Take thee Joshua... and lay thine hands upon him (Num. 27: 18). Be strong (Deut. 31: 7). This man led them forth (Acts 7: 36). Who went about doing good (Acts 10: 38).
II. Intimate with God: A prophet... whom the Lord knew face to face (10). And Enoch walked with God (Gen. 5: 24). I have seen God face to face (Gen. 32: 30).

and Chapter 33 is his final blessing on the children of Israel. The time of the lesson is the close of the fortieth year of the wanderings. The place was in the east of Jordan, over against Jericho; the precise site of Nebo and Pisgah has been long in dispute, but opinion now inclines to the peaks called Jebel Neba, and a crest to the west of it (Jebel Siaghih).

America and Australia.

I found myself constantly making comparisons and discovering similarities between America and Australia, though when I began to analyze the points of similarity they did not amount to much beyond wooden houses, trees, stacks of sawn timber, waxes, termulose, bananas and sweet potatoes, and a general suggestion of bigness, freedom, and democracy.

It seems to me as well that there was a likeness between the American type of character and the Australian. The same open air of honesty, and some of the same open air self-assertiveness struck me; the same curious combination of utilitarianism and spiritualism, and the power of adaptability, particularly to be noticed in the women of both races—much, too, I thought, of the same originality and individual way of putting things; much also of the slavish adoration and imitation of everything English. But some of the venerated Americans to whom I mentioned this fancy of mine did not take to the suggestion. I think that they looked upon Australia as still in a state of barbarism; whereas one of them assured me that American civilization was the concentrated result of deliberate selection from everything of good value in Europe, he said, had created an experimental civilization; but America, meaning the United States, had taken hers ready made, and had improved upon it.

Earth Worms Causing Trichinosis.

It is a not uncommon occurrence that a parasite inhabits different animals at different stages of its growth. This is the case with the small thread worm, syn gamus trichinella, which infests the whipple of the pheasant, peacock, turkey, duck and other fowls, and often occasions considerable damage. Mr. Walker, of Franklinville, N. Y., has recently made some experiments on the subject. He finds that the intermediate host of the embryo syn gamus is the common earth worm, which in places visited by birds has been found to be beset with these parasites. They are swallowed by birds along with the worms, and perforating the esophagus, find their way into the respiratory organs. During, or immediately after, this migration the syn gamus attains sexual maturity and attaches itself to the tracheae. It happens in six or seven days after it has been swallowed. In seven days more its eggs are produced, which are coughed up by the bird and reach the ground, where the embryo emerges in the form of a minute, worm-like creature, which is swallowed by another worm, and remains in its intestinal canal until devoured by a bird. The best method to check this disease is to moisten the soil with brine, which kills both the worms and the embryo syn gamus which they contain. Birds which have died of this disease should be destroyed by fire.

Don't be a Grumbler.

Some people contrive to get hold of the prickly side of everything, to run against all the sharp corners and disagreeable things. Half the strength spent in growling would often set things right. You may as well make up your mind to begin with, that no one ever loved the world quite as he would like it; but you get to take your part of the trouble and bear it bravely. You will be sure to have burdens laid upon you that belong to other people, unless you are a shirker yourself; but don't grumble. If the work needs doing, you can do it, never mind about that other who ought to have done it and didn't. Those workers who fill up the gaps and smooth away the rough spots, and finish up the jobs that others leave undone—they are the true peacemakers, as worth a whole regiment of growlers.

New York's Butter-milk Habit.

The butter-milk habit seems to be alarmingly on the increase in New York City. On Park row alone, between Ann street and Frankfort, there are now daily no less than three paramilitary dairies, which have for their most conspicuous placards an announcement of the fact that their butter-milk is "positively churned this morning, and is kept in process in live jars." Similar establishments are scattered about most of the leading downtown streets. Butter-milk costs five cents a glass, while milk costs five, which may account for some of the popularity of the former beverage.

The manner of giving shows the character of the giver more than the gift itself. If God did not take us to Himself, few would go to Him of their own accord. An affected man proclaims his own deficiencies, tells what he desires and yet lacks. Truth should be the first lesson of the child and the last aspiration to manhood.

close-fitting habit, with the smiling rose-leaf face under the pretty plumed cap. And such romantic and charming girls they took—to Cloverdell, and Lilymere, and up the hillsides to overlook the shining lake! It made all the bright autumn dull and dark to Stuart Markham.

CHARLEY'S CHOICE.

"Charley? What a queer name for a girl!" "Tapa vowed to name his first child after himself. As I was only a girl, he did the best he could."

Miss Charline Faye was a very pretty girl, as she stood, smiling and dimpled before the early October fire, the warm light touching her curves and colors with charming effect. Perhaps she knew it; certainly Stuart Markham did.

There were Dr. Drew, and Paul Cavendish, and Dick Ralston, for instance. "I like them all," said Charley. "They like me, and I like them."

"Thank you, Mr. Ralston!" she said immediately. "I shall be delighted." And Mr. Ralston certainly looked so. That young fellow surely never looked more amiable than at this moment.

"Charley, why aren't you at the picnic?" was Stuart's surprised inquiry. "Because I thought I would rather stay with you."

"No, a great deal." "A happy pause." "Because I've smashed my face and broke my arm!" "No." "Because you are tired of the other?" "No." "Why, then?" "Because I do."

love sorrows in the eagerness of pursuit. There was an exhilaration in the air which would have lifted the heaviest heart.

PUNISHED BY A DREAM.

I read with great interest the recent opinion of a physician expressed in your paper to the effect that death sometimes occurs in sleep from fright in nightmares. I thought some of your readers might be interested in my case, for I can relate an experience that seems to be phenomenal.

I am 27 years old, robust and sound, and I never knew of premature age coming on any of my people. Yet I am gray and old far beyond my years. It all came about in a single night. When I was a boy, hungry, poor and forlorn, I was tempted into crime. I saw in a window open packages of rich candles. By stepping inside the door and watching my opportunity I could reach one of them. I thought nobody was looking, but when I snatched one and fled I ran straight into the arms of a policeman on the pavement outside.

"Don't wait for me, Gerty," she said in a quiet subdued voice. "I want to see you, Miss Faye," he said. "There is to be a delightfully select little picnic in the grove on Wednesday. Will you go?"

"Thank you, Mr. Ralston!" she said immediately. "I shall be delighted." And Mr. Ralston certainly looked so. That young fellow surely never looked more amiable than at this moment.

"Charley, why aren't you at the picnic?" was Stuart's surprised inquiry. "Because I thought I would rather stay with you."

"No, a great deal." "A happy pause." "Because I've smashed my face and broke my arm!" "No." "Because you are tired of the other?" "No." "Why, then?" "Because I do."

roads constantly laid by timely showers. Lawns have been fresh and green from May to September; the foliage of trees and shrubbery has been neither dry nor discolored with incrustations of dust; and garden have flourished in a most unexampled manner. Everything that has been put in the ground has grown with vigor and has yielded abundant returns for cultivation. Flowers have blossomed in perfection of form and color. Everything that is dear to the heart of the suburban resident has been a constant source of unalloyed pleasure and comfort. His eyes have found rest every night, surveying his own and his neighbor's well-kept lawns and the picturesque effects of orderly and not too conventional landscape gardening. His children have had a well-shaded playground close to his house, and he and they have slept in large, well-ventilated rooms in place of the cramped closets of summer hotels and boarding houses; and the household has grown fat on the fruits of his early morning toil in his modest garden. Strawberries, raspberries, green peas, salad-plants—everything he has had in abundance from his own ground; and as September opens, luscious melons and peaches are ripening in the sun, golden corn hangs from the well-nourished stalks, and limas and tomatoes are luxuriant on the vines. For the man who stays at home the lines have fallen in pleasant places.

The man who stays at home may be so contented with his lot that his annual vacation in the autumn will find him distinguished for a change of air. If he be closely occupied with the demands of business during the year he is enabled at best to devote to his lawn, his garden and his home only a spare hour at the beginning or the end of the day. His labors of love on his grounds and indoors are never wholly done. He plans every Sunday more than his leisure during the week allows him to carry out, and he goes through the season with a sense of being in arrears. An autumn vacation, if passed at home, enables him to do many things that have been left undone, and there is a peculiar attraction in such leisure for a man who has been in a chronic state of being hurried for six months or a year. A fortnight at home without business interruptions or anxieties may be a luxury almost as enjoyable as a fortnight at a distance under new conditions. So it comes to pass that many a man who has not stayed at home wholly as a matter of choice will remain there at the close of the season, although it may be within his power to seek health and novelty elsewhere.

Fun at a Luncheon.

A query corner correspondent asks for some "pretty devices" to enhance the attractions of luncheons, teas, etc., and also what souvents may be given. At a recent luncheon, before each guest was placed a prettily decorated bowl or cup containing beans. The one who guessed nearest to the number of beans in her own cup received the first prize. To the one who made the next best guess was given the second, and to the one who made the poorest guess was given the "booty" prize. It created much fun and merriment, and the pretty cups were taken home as souvenirs. At another luncheon a large bowl with beans was placed in the center of the table, and prizes given in accordance with the guesses, a prize being provided for each person at the luncheon.

The Bluebird's Ancestry.

In line with this is another observation which I made two summers ago, and was enabled to confirm last summer. Our bluebird is no doubt a modified thrush; that is, its ancestor in the remote past was doubtless of the thrush family. One evidence of this is the fact that the young of the bluebird has a speckled breast like the thrush; and Darwin established the principle that peculiar markings or traits confined in the youth of any species are an inheritance from early progenitors. In addition to this, I have noted in the song of the female bluebird—one of a pair that for two seasons have built near me—a distinct note of the thrush. Whenever I hear the voice of this bird it reminds me of that of a certain thrush—the olive-backed.

Building Law in Berlin.

According to Building, the new law in Berlin is very strict. "No building can occupy more than two-thirds of the ground, nor be higher than the width of the street. None can be occupied as a dwelling until six months after it is built, and the number of persons to be permitted in each sleeping room is to be prescribed by the sanitary inspectors by the number of many cubic feet of space for each person. No unventilated or unlighted room is allowed to be used for personal occupation. Severe penalties are exacted for violation or neglect of the rules."

I read with great interest the recent opinion of a physician expressed in your paper to the effect that death sometimes occurs in sleep from fright in nightmares. I thought some of your readers might be interested in my case, for I can relate an experience that seems to be phenomenal.

I am 27 years old, robust and sound, and I never knew of premature age coming on any of my people. Yet I am gray and old far beyond my years. It all came about in a single night. When I was a boy, hungry, poor and forlorn, I was tempted into crime. I saw in a window open packages of rich candles. By stepping inside the door and watching my opportunity I could reach one of them. I thought nobody was looking, but when I snatched one and fled I ran straight into the arms of a policeman on the pavement outside.

"Don't wait for me, Gerty," she said in a quiet subdued voice. "I want to see you, Miss Faye," he said. "There is to be a delightfully select little picnic in the grove on Wednesday. Will you go?"

"Thank you, Mr. Ralston!" she said immediately. "I shall be delighted." And Mr. Ralston certainly looked so. That young fellow surely never looked more amiable than at this moment.

"Charley, why aren't you at the picnic?" was Stuart's surprised inquiry. "Because I thought I would rather stay with you."

"No, a great deal." "A happy pause." "Because I've smashed my face and broke my arm!" "No." "Because you are tired of the other?" "No." "Why, then?" "Because I do."

 For Congressman,
Hon. Jas. Buchanan.

State Convention.
 The Republican voters of New Jersey, and all others in favor of the Protection to American wage-workers and the national development of American industries, are requested to elect delegates to a State Convention to be held on Thursday, Sept. 27th,

 at 12 o'clock, noon, in Taylor Opera House, in Trenton, for the purpose of nominating nine Electors for President and Vice-President to be supported at the approaching National Election.

The basis of representation under this call will be one delegate for each two hundred (200) Republican votes cast at the last Presidential election, and one to be elected for each fraction thereof exceeding one hundred (100) votes; provided that every township, ward, and precinct, legally defined as such in Jersey City, shall be represented by at least one delegate.

By order of Republican State Committee,
 G. HERBERT A. HUBBART, Chairman,
 JOHN Y. FOSTER, Secretary.

Atlantic Co. will choose fifteen delegates, as follows:
 Atlantic City, 1; Galloway, 1;
 Hammonton, 1; Mullica, 1;
 Egg Harbor City, 1; Egg Harbor Township, 1;
 Egg Harbor Point, 1; Weymouth, 1.

The Congressional Convention met at Mount Holly on Wednesday, and from beginning to the end it was a most harmonious and enthusiastic gathering.

Dr. H. E. Bowles was chosen Chairman. There had been three candidates for nomination.—Judge Buchanan, of Mercer County, the present incumbent; Dr. J. Howard Pugh of Burlington; State Senator George Cranmer of Ocean County. It was seen, during the forenoon, that Mr. Buchanan had sufficient votes to nominate him, and no other name was mentioned in the Convention.

Atlantic County nominated Mr. B.; Burlington nominated no one; Mercer seconded the nomination; Ocean moved to make the nomination by acclamation. This capped the climax of unexpected unanimity, and the entire convention rose, and spent a few minutes in singing hats, canes and umbrellas, with shouts and cheers.

Mr. Buchanan was introduced, but was so much affected by the welcome received that he made but a short speech; but it was a good one. His two terms of efficient service speak loud enough to all, and count for much more than words. A better man than he could not be found in the District; and as able representatives are not abundant.

The wealthy Cyrus W. Field does not consider himself above the "chicken business," and Mr. Frank Hopping, of this place, having received a liberal offer from him, has gone to make definite arrangements. Capable and experienced poultrymen are in demand.

Alex. Aitken has decided not to put up a brick building this year; and has just contracted to build thirteen wagons for Messrs. Snowden (Harry) & Thompson, of Philadelphia, who have now a very large lumber yard, and are preparing for heavy business.

It appears as though the honor of standing for office on the Prohibition ticket is not as highly valued as it might be. At least we see that Mr. Kalkoff has withdrawn, and our esteemed friend Thomas Kozers is now their candidate for Assembly. 'T would be hard to find a better man in any party.

The tax duplicate is now in the Collector's hands, and the bills will be ready about October 1st. If any one is anxious about the matter, he can obtain full satisfaction at any time at the office. The Collector will even be willing to sign receipts if proper inducements are offered.

Messrs. Henry Smith and Newton Clark, of Virginia, formerly of New York, have bought the Somerby farm, on Main Road, with all its stock, tools, furniture, and unharvested crops. This is the place sold by Capt. A. Somerby to Mr. Demas, and by him to a Philadelphia. The new proprietors will take possession at once, and with their families will prove a welcome addition to our population.

Still they come—two more names added to the list of Hammonians who voted for "Tippecanoe and Tyler too," in 1840:

Dr. Joseph H. North.
 James I. Horton.
 Nicholas MacCurdy.
 Geo. W. Paul.

Mr. D. I. Wilkinson, of Horse Cave, Ky., adds a like testimony, saying: "He positively believes he would have died had it not been for Electric Bitters."

Wilkinson's Phosphate.
 After three years' trial; after several car-loads have been used in this section on plants, berries, trees, potatoes, corn, garden truck, etc.; after repeated trials with other fertilizers, side by side, by unbiased men, and evidence given in its favor, we ask for another fair trial with any other phosphate or fertilizer you may choose to use, and note improved results in your crops.

This phosphate does not reduce the soil, but its benefits can be seen for years after. For sale by
