Songs The People Sang Yesterday

The other evening a tenor with good voice and a fair degree of musical intelligence in two solos to an audience that crowded a moving picture theatre to the doors in a large New England city. The audience was made up of the plain people whom Lincoln brought to the North, and who loved because he made so many of them.

The first song was a selection from one of the old operas. Rendered in Italian, it was not enjoyed by many in the audience, and it got but little applause. But the next number was followed by a tremendous burst of hand-clapping. It was "Marguerite." The older persons who had those who heard the song that had been dear to them a quarter of a century ago. The young folks did what their fathers and mothers had done before them. Hearing the song for the first time, they promptly fell in love with it. If any concert singer were to give a program made up entirely of the sentimental and humorous songs that were favorites 20 and 30 years ago, he would probably get from an audience of the ordinary rank-and-file type—such an ovation as falls to the lot of the great singing stars.

The first line you meet a friend whose age is in the neighborhood of 40 years just ask him if he remembers "Marguerite" and "Will Till the Clouds Roll By," and note how his eyes will begin to shine and how his hand will be raised in a gesture as he replies. Then ask him about "McClintock" and "La-Ra-La-Boom-De-Ay," and see his face break into a smile.

The liking for those old songs was not merely a feeling fancy. They took hold in a moment and were the affections. They were able to do because they had certain characteristics which carried them along from one generation to another. For one thing, they appealed in a direct and simple way to some sentiment that is common to all human beings. It might be the love of home or of mother, or pride in the flag of the land. They might express something of the romantic yearning for an ideally contrive to attach to their sweethearts experience.

Another characteristic that is always found in these old songs is that they are simple and direct. They are not like the modern songs that are so full of complications. They are simple and direct, and they are full of sentiment. They are simple and direct, and they are full of sentiment. They are simple and direct, and they are full of sentiment.

The Lyceum Course.

Hammonton Lyceum Association are entering their twelfth year, and will issue their program next week. They have used the utmost care in the selection of the best talent, and have no hesitation in claiming this year's as the best one yet.

Tickets are now on sale by Edw. E. Johnson; and it is suggested that the patrons secure theirs early, not waiting for the canvasser's visit.

The first number—a fair sample of the four to follow—comes on Friday evening, Oct. 23rd, and is entitled:

THE HARMONY CONCERT PARTY.

The Harmony Concert Party is made up of four versatile musicians. Mr. McNemy, whose work is by no means new to the Lyceum platform, plays the mandolin, banjo, saxophone and xylophone. He was instructor of mandolin, guitar and banjo in Pittsburgh for many years, also the director of several mandolin and banjo clubs. In addition to his ensemble work, his solos are extremely popular.

Too much cannot be said of Mrs. McNemy's work upon the piano. It is often-referred-to-as marvellous. She is a conservatory graduate with honors. She also plays the xylophone and mandolin.

"Alois Bohumil" Hrabak, who plays the flute, banjo, viola and xylophone, is a musician of such skill that he has appeared for four seasons with the festival orchestra of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra. He has also played with Kyril's Band. He studied with Arton Fayer, Victor Sandek and Carl Bernthaler.

H. Calvin Jordan studied piano and harmony with De Roan and Gemet. He began playing the harp at an early age with his father, who was one of the first harpists in western Pennsylvania. He is well known as a soloist and has had large orchestral experience. He has also been prominently associated with church work in Pittsburgh. He plays not only the harp and piano, but the mandocello and the banjo.

During the season of 1913-14 this company appeared as the only musical on a course at Oyster Bay, the remaining numbers being lectures by Theodore Roosevelt, Dr. Nowell Dwight Hillis and others.
