N. B.—Do not forget the great reduction in prices.

My boy, 13 years old, was so affected by St. Vitus Dance that he could not go to school for two years. Two bottles of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic restored his health, and he is now attending school again.

I used Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic for nervous trouble caused by overwork, and found it all that it is claimed to be. After using one bottle it had the desired effect, and I can truly recommend it to all suffering a like complaint, as a really wonderful remedy.

For seven years my eldest daughter had fainting spells and spasms. Last June she took the first of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic, and since that time they have entirely ceased.

Subject: "The City of Ephesus."

Text: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians."

over death.—"He must reign till He has put all enemies under His feet"—ye, under.

Paul told the liberal truth when he said, "I have fought with beasts at Ephesus," and as the apostle is used to the excitement of the arena, he is not so much excited by the sight of the arena as that day in the middle of the Stadium and looked around at the great structure, the temple of Diana.

But was out of the Stadium, for years ago, in the city of Ephesus, a city of Asia Minor, a city of the seven churches of Asia, stood here the seven churches of Asia Minor. You will find it written, "To the church in Smyrna."

Shaken by earthquake, swept by conflagration, blighted by plague, and hatched by the pestilence of the pestilence, the city of Ephesus was a city of the seven churches of Asia Minor.

When he was brought to the firm into which he was about to fasten him, and the firm into which he was about to fasten him, and the firm into which he was about to fasten him.

But I have now to unveil the chief wonder of this city of Ephesus. In 1883, under the leadership of the explorer, Gen. Sir John Wood, the explorer, Gen. Sir John Wood.

FAMOUS TURKEY DRIVING. To the stranger who is in Quebec in the fall of the year, you will be particularly drawn to the latter part of October, nothing is likely to be more interesting than the great flocks of poultry driven along the public highways to stations on the Vermont Central Railway for shipment to various points in the States, where they are rested and fed up before killing and dressing for the market in New York City.

Droves aggregating many hundreds of turkeys, and other hundreds of ducks, go straddling and waddling, piping and quacking along the road with a man in front to coax and a lot of happy-go-lucky boys behind to drive, without attracting any other sort of attention from the passer-by, a farmer would bestow on a passing bunch of steers; but to the stranger it is a sight not soon to be forgotten. One drove that contained 1,500 turkeys alone arrived here the other day, and was quickly huddled in a cart, car and shipped off into Vermont. That was a big flock for these here parts, and it made quite a little stir here.

Time was when an ordinary flock consisted of 2,000 turkeys, 3,000 geese and 700 or 800 ducks, and a corresponding large number of geese and ducks were not unknown. They were driven along the road in a cart, car and shipped off into Vermont. That was a big flock for these here parts, and it made quite a little stir here.

The poultry drovers were almost invariably Yankees, and Vermont Yankees at that. The driving season began in September and ended in November. At the opening of the season the boss drover would drive up through Quebec in a two-horse wagon, going often as far as the St. Lawrence River, either above or below Montreal. He had his agents at every village along the route, and to each agent he had previously sent the price he would pay per pair for each sort of birds. The prices in the old times were about 60 cents a pair for turkeys, 40 cents for geese, and from 30 to 35 cents a pair for ducks. Since the building of the Vermont Central prices have advanced, and this year the dealers here have been paying 80 cents a pair for prime turkeys, such as sell for 12 cents in Fulton Market, New York, while geese have brought $1.40 a pair, and ducks 60 cents.

Having, as one may say, billed his agents at every village along the route, the drover would be expected to come back over the route to go to the parish church, as the people were coming out from the service, and getting upon the church steps where they could see the people and all could see them, they would announce in a loud voice that the drover would be leaving in five or ten minutes, and would say, "I will give you a certain day and would pay such and such prices in cash for turkeys, geese and ducks delivered at a certain place in the village—usually the yard or garden of the agent."

The day named was a great event in the village's history of that parish. The arrival of the boss drover at a village for the purchase of the surplus crop of poultry in that vicinity was usually the day before the arrival of the main drove, which would be purchased further up the road. This gave a further rest and a comfortable feed to the fowls purchased, and they were ready to fall in line the next morning and travel away on the road to Vermont.

The buying began up on the St. Lawrence River somewhere, and the drove on the first day it started toward Vermont consisted, of course, of the fowls purchased in the village, and the number amounting perhaps to no more than two or three hundred, selected by the drover, and the balance of the flock was added by the drover. The droves were made at about every farm house passed by the drover.

The driving along the road was done by a man and from three to thirty boys, according to the size of the flock. As many boys as could be obtained were hired for large flocks. A man would walk in front with a sack of corn, oats or peas, or all three in one, maybe, slung over his shoulder as a farmer carries his grain, and he would be followed by a line of boys, each carrying a sack of corn, oats or peas, or all three in one, maybe, slung over his shoulder as a farmer carries his grain, and he would be followed by a line of boys, each carrying a sack of corn, oats or peas, or all three in one, maybe, slung over his shoulder as a farmer carries his grain.

BE WHAT YOU WISH TO BEEM. If you would have the name of being honest and upright, there is but one way to do it. The boy who wishes to be a man may wear a mask an hour for a time, but a slight thing may lose it and expose to view his true face. Besides, men of substance have remarkable eyes, which pierce right through the mask. It is not worth a boy's while to try and wear one to deceive them.
