Fire-Marshal Drown has issued a note to the firemen to be on hand, at their hall, punctually at seven o'clock Monday evening next, Dec. 30th, for the purpose of drilling. The company will have a parade previous to their entertainment at Union Hall.

By special request, the farce of "The Little Rebel," and the domestic drama "The Flower of the Family," will be presented at Union Hall, Thursday evening, Jan. 2nd. Doors open at 7 o'clock; curtain rises at 8. Admission, 25 and 35 cents. Reserved seat tickets for sale at Cochran's drug store.

Private advices are to the effect that Santa Claus will never visit this latitude again on a day like Wednesday, unless the authorities will guarantee to have the streets sprinkled in advance of his arrival. This thing of starting out in a sleigh and getting lost in a cloud of dust is not to his taste. The weather is out of joint all along the line.

Well, Christmas is past. Did it bring you what you most desired? We had no reason to build high hopes, and we were more than pleased,—it proved a "merry Christmas" indeed. Who wouldn't be satisfied? A delightful day, a good dinner, and numerous tokens of regard from those whose friendship we esteem most highly. Wasn't that your experience, reader?

Many of our sidewalks have been so hollowed out by use that they hold water every time it rains. An occasional cut through the ridge to the ditch would save a great deal of muddy walking during the coming winter.

A few basket-worms made their appearance again this year, and the sooner they are picked off and burned the better. Will you pick and burn all that are on your premises? Then, if others do not attend to theirs, they will have no reason to complain if complaint is made to the Town Council. W. F. D.

The news that the illness of the Rev.
Charles H. Spurgeon has assumed a serious aspect will be received with sorrow and regret by all denominations of evangelical Christians. He has been a wonderful power for good in his chosen field in London. Comparatively unknown, he began a work as a Christian minister which has grown to such proportions that his name is known and loved throughout all civilized lands as an able, fearless champion of gospel truth and freedom. The world to-day, more than ever before perhaps can ill afford to lose such men as Charles H.
Spurgeon.

The New York World's Fair fund now amounts to $5,288,524.

One banker in Boston drew 4240 drafts last week representing $53,800 which working people were sending to their relatives in Europe as Christmas gifts. We don't hear of the workmen in the Free-trade nations of Europe sending any such little tokens of prosperity to their kinsmen in this tariff-ridden country. Odd, isn't it?

The House Committee on Ways and Means began its tariff hearings by listening to the views of parties interested in metals, ores and coal.

Pension Commissioner Raum is ill at at his home in Washington.

Some weeks ago, Mr. James Ross and family moved into Mr. Adolph A.
Butler's house, with an arrangement for Mr. Butler and assistants to board with them. Later, for some reason, the Ross family moved out.—Since then, Mr. B. has missed many articles from his housekeeping outfit, and on Monday procured a search-warrant from Squire Atkinson, and, with Constable Scullin, searched the present residence of Mr.
Ross, where he identified some things, including several towels. Subsequently, before the Justice, Mr. Butler proposed to drop the case if defendants would acknowledge his ownership of the articles seized, and pay all costs. This was agreed to. On Thursday, Mr. Ross returned the compliment by securing proper papers from Justice Jordan; and,
with Constable Bernshouse, entered Mr. Butler's house to search for an umbrella, a child's dress, and a towel, which they found.—When brought before the Justice, Butler demanded a jury trial, which was held that evening.

After hearing the evidence offered, the jury were satisfied that the umbrella and dress were overlooked when the Ross family moved out, and never called for; and the towel was so much like others owned by Butler that he could not swear to ownership (though it had been surrendered to him on Monday), so they gave a mixed verdict.—Ross to have said towel, the costs to be divided.
That little article (worth perhaps fifteen cents) and a little experience, cost Mr.
Ross $3.05, and there may be a considerably more before 'tis done with.

cles seized, and pay all costs. This was
proper papers from Justice Jordan; and,
with Constable Bernshouse, entered
Mr. Butler's house to search for an
umbrella, a child's dress, and a towel,
which they found.—When brought be-
trial, which was held that evening.

been surrendered to him on Monday),
to have said towel, the costs to be divided.
cents) and a little experience, cost Mr.
erably more before 'tis done with.

Mr. John T. French's customers and friends will find him, for the present, in Mr. Brown's wagon shop. The justly prized Hammond Pants will still be supplied to all who come.

Some fellow absorbed too much fire-water, on Christmas, and that night insisted upon admission to the Ellis building, smashing a pane of glass with his fist before he was driven away.

Ross family moved out.—Since then,
Mr. B. has missed many articles from
his housekeeping outfit, and on Monday

searched the present residence of Mr.
